Dim Lights, Safety Director Jones Says

H. D. Jones, head of the Motor Vehicles department's Highway Safety division today issued a reproach to motorists who habitually fail to dim their lights when approaching other cars. The safety head, who spends the greater part of each week traveling the highways of the state, said he personally had experienced the blinding effect from oncoming autos with headlights pitched high.

"Dimming the country beam when meeting other vehicles is not only courteous and safe, it is a state law," said Director Jones. Traffic safety engineers say that glare from the driving beam of approaching headlights will reduce the average driver's perception distance—his ability to recognize danger—from 75 to 80 per cent. Jones recommended that every motorist always dim his lights, and slow down when the other fellow won't dim his.
