Store-Wide Packaging With Cellophane Is Started In N J

Soilage Markdowns Reduced Sharply. Experiments Underway For 2 Months

L. Bamberger and Co. of Newark, N. J., is converting to store-wrapped cellophane packages for merchandise throughout the entire store, the first department store in the nation to do so, it was jointly announced today by Bamberger and by Olin cellophane.

The store, largest in New Jersey, has been packaging items in store-wrapped cellophane bags for a two-month test period during which sales of cellophane-wrapped items have been increased and soilage mark-downs sharply reduced, officials of the store said.

Since January, the test has been extended through 12 departments, ranging from linens to china. Other departments are being added rapidly, according to Bamberger officials.

"The operation does more than pay for itself," said V. G. O'Connell, Bamberger assistant manager of operations. "In the kyetette department alone savings will pay for automatic bag-making machinery and heat-sealing equipment for the entire store, without taking into account the revenue increase from improved sales."

As a result of an exhaustive survey of store merchandise conducted before the test began, Olin cellophane packaging engineers were able to standardize the width of bags to accommodate every feasible type of goods on their recommendation bag-making and heat-sealing machinery was installed in the receiving department, store officials said.

Some cellophane bags were filled and heat-sealed in the receiving department. Most were brought to counters, where sales clerks slipped goods into bags and sealed the packages with cellophane tape.

Just as important as the savings due to the reduction in soilage and the elimination of mis-makes is the brand new opportunity for multiple sales opened up with cellophane

Departments already converted to Olin cellophane, Mr. O'Connell said, include linens, curtains, towels, pillow cases, layettes, upholstery sundries, china, cosmetics, men's shirts, women's sweaters and some sporting goods. Other departments will be added, he said.

COUNCIL MAY BUY

here May 5-7 to survey the proposed site, consult with the members of the Pisgah Council camping committee, with staff officials and John Carroll, finance chairman.

A final decision regarding the purchase of the site, now known as McFarlane Lake, will depend on the recommendations of Salomon. The council meeting which follows Salomon's visit will vote on the proposed camp purchase.

The camp site has already been viewed and approved by Anthony P. Williamson, United Fund executive director. The UF contributes to the support of Girl Scout work in Buncombe county through the council.

bags, Mr. O'Connell said.

"We recently took some men's white handkerchiefs which had been in cellophane, six to a package. We cleaned out our entire stock over a single week end," Mr. O'Connell said.

Cost analysis of the test operation revealed that wrapping goods at the store did not require even a single additional employee and was accomplished at less than half the cost to manufacturers wrapping the same merchandise at the factory, according to store executives.

Packaging merchandise in cellophane has simplified the handling of goods at the counter, Bamberger executives report. It will also effect a substantial saving with returned merchandise and in inventory taking.
