

A TENNESSEAN, William Feathers, made a crash landing in the Piper Cub plane above in a field of Frank Merrill at Little River last week. Although the small ship flipped over in the soggy soil and tall grass, Mr. Feathers walked away, un-injured. However, the plane was badly damaged and had to be dismantled before being hauled back to the Asheville - Hendersonville airport, the airport from which Mr. Feathers had rented it. He was forced to make a crash landing in this vicinity because of darkness and storms at airports in Asheville and at Hendersonville.

Agricultural Departments Release Farm Census Survey For County

Crop Breakdown Is Given. Most Of Land Is Wooded. Livestock Increasing

A preliminary '57 Farm Census summary is released today for Transylvania county by the commissioners. Freeman Hayes, the chairman of the board, announces. The report, compiled by the North Carolina and the U. S. Departments of Agriculture and the Crop Reporting service, Raleigh, is made up of information that was contributed by farmers of the county to the county commissioners through the Farm Census supervisor and the township listers this past January.

The chairman says these data should not be considered as official estimates since they make no allowance for undetectable errors in reports for individual tracts.

There were 62,026 acres of farmland in Transylvania during 1956, with 18 percent of the total being in harvested cropland, the report shows.

The majority of the croplands in Transylvania, or 40,679 acres, is in woodland. This represents 67 percent, while nine percent is in improved pasture, three percent in unimproved pastures and three percent idle.

Corn is still the big crop in Transylvania, with 4,434 acres being harvested during the past year. This represents 38 percent of the harvested cropland, and it is a decrease during the previous year.

For 1955, some 5,345 acres in Transylvania were in corn.
