NEW DRIVE-UP WINDOW OPENED AT LOCAL BANK

Parking Lot Now Being Used By Customers. Additions Said A Forward Step

The new drive-up bank window was opened here at the First National Bank and Trust company on Wednesday.

John W. Smith, who has been barbering in Brevard for more than 50 years, made the first deposit at the new window. Ralph J. Duckworth, the vice president, reports that Mr. Smith made the first deposit at the Transylvania Trust company, which recently merged with First National at Asheville, Hendersonville and Waynesville back in 1931.

Mr. Duckworth explains that the new drive-up window enables patrons of the bank to attend to most of their banking business with practically no loss of time, right from the window of their car.

The opening of the drive-up window and the parking lot adjacent to the bank is another forward step by First National. Mr. Duckworth points out.

He also reminds patrons using the drive-up window and parking lot to enter on Caldwell street, behind the bank and then drive out on Main.

Reports Heard

Town, County And Industries Are Reducing Stream Pollution

The State Stream Sanitation committee presented recommended plans for reducing water pollution in the French Broad river basin in last Thursday at a hearing in Asheville. The meeting was attended by several local citizens, including town and county officials and representatives of industry and the Brevard Chamber of Commerce.

This public hearing was necessary before the committee could proceed to adopt recommended classifications for the many streams in the basin. The committee has tentatively classified these streams.

E. C. Hubbard, executive secretary of the State Stream Sanitation committee, said that it is doubtful that the state will have to take a "get tough" policy to clean up Western North Carolina streams, since the great majority of municipalities and industries have shown a desire to work out the problems voluntarily.

Philip C. Brownell, general manager of the Ecusta paper division of Olin Mathieson Chemical corporation reported to the committee that, "Our company has spent a great deal of money — over half million dollars — on the industrial waste problems and is now continuing such research to find additional reasonable and rational standards.

"In many industries such as ours the technical means for solving some of the problems without destroying the industry which creates the problems, simply are not known. The solution or partial solutions which may fit one case will not fit another," the Olin Mathieson executive explained.

Mr. Brownell told the committee, however, "Just because the problems are difficult, does not mean that we have not worked and will not work toward finding answers".
