Trees Must Live If ASC To Share In Planting Cost

Many North Carolina farmers are apparently going to be in for a big disappointment when they start to collect for trees planted under ACP and Soil Bank Conservation Reserve contracts.

The contracts state that a satisfactory number of the trees must be living at the end of the first summer. In addition, Soil Bank tree planting contracts require that a satisfactory stand of trees must be maintained on the land during the term of the contract.

Inspectors for the North Carolina Forest Service say that a great many areas planted in trees this year are already failures and definitely will not qualify for government cost-sharing.

The foresters say the failures are caused by: (1) Improper care of seedlings before planting, and (2) poor planting procedures.

Fred Claridge, state forester, who is responsible for inspection of these tree plantings, says that each planting will be carefully checked. Those plantings not meeting survival requirements will be turned down for payment if the planting failure is caused by condition that could have been controlled by the landowner.

The landowner is responsible for meeting all the planting requirements, Claridge reminded, regardless of who does the actual planting.

Three Local Men Visit Purina Farm

John J. Brown, of Pisgah Forest, W. W. Brittain, and Arnold L. Wells, of Brevard, were among approximately 300 farmers from this section of the country who visited the Purina Research farm at Gray Summit, Missouri last week and spent the following day touring the company's mills and research laboratories in St. Louis.

Thousands of farmers from all sections of the United States and many from foreign countries visit the farm each year to see results of experiments conducted there in livestock and poultry feeding and management. The 778-acre farm is devoted entirely to farm research projects.

dous success, as was the camping season. During '58, some 211 girl Scouts from the 11 counties attended five day sessions at the camp here.

Previous cookie projects have provided capital improvements for the camp, such as two complete tent units for 40 girls and 16 adults, complete with tents, platforms, shelters and wash houses.

Operating expenses are provided for the Girl Scout camp through the United fund, while capital improvements are made with money derived from the cookie sale.

The cookie sale goal this year will net 48,000 boxes, or 24 boxes per Girl Scout.

Architect for the new troop camp cabin is Brevard's Robert Daniels, who will follow the construction through to completion, and Earl Johnson, of Brevard, will be in charge of mechanical maintenance.
