Young Artist Will Play On Saturday's And Sunday's Programs. Review Made

The Brevard Music center, now in its fourth week of "A Summer Festival of Music", will feature pianist Coleman Blumfield as guest artist this week end.

Mr. Blumfield, one of the rising young artists of America, will appear in concert Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon at the Brevard Music center, home of Transylvania Music camp and the Brevard Music festival.

Mr. Blumfield was graduated from Curtis Institute of Music and has been studying under a distinguished concert artist since his graduation. He made his New York orchestral debut last February as a soloist with the American Chamber Orchestra.

While developing into a master pianist who is now ready to face the rigors of professional life, Mr. Blumfield also has a wide range of outside interests. In his academic studies at school, he was outstanding in mathematics, winning an award in that subject, and in astronomy. At one time he even considered giving up his music for a career in science. He is a hi-fi enthusiast and also enjoys reading, particularly drama. Of athletic build, he is a good swimmer, and, whenever possible, still takes part in his favorite boyhood sport . . . baseball.

The Transylvania Concert band and the Transylvania chorus, under the direction of James Christian Pfohl, will perform Friday evening. The band's program will include "Three Choral Preludes" by Bach, "Toccata Marziale", Vaughn Williams, "The Rosenkavalier Waltzes" by Strauss and the "1812 Overture" by Tchaikovsky.
