Brevard Band Well Received At Greensboro, Rated "Excellent"

By - The Editor

The fine Brevard high school band won an excellent rating in the State finals at Greensboro last Friday.

Playing in Group five classification, Brevard received a tremendous ovation as the curtain fell at the conclusion of their third number, a selection that was ordered played by the judges.

It was by far the best performance of the youthful musicians this year, and only the judges know why Brevard did not receive a superior rating.

Band directors from across

North Carolina said that the Brevard band was a superior band in the finals.

Emerson Head, director of the Wake Forest band, said he rated their performance as superior.

Brevard's musicians played under a terrific handicap. Five minutes before their concert was to begin, the lights in Aycock auditorium went out.

In almost total darkness, the local band had to set up in position. Then there was a delay of 35 minutes.

The tension mounted with every minute. But the minute the lights went on and Director John D. Eversman raised his baton, all was calm and no one knew just how nervous our boys and girls were.

They played their hearts out and not one sour note was heard during the 25-minute concert.

This writer had heard the Brevard band play in Greensboro on four previous occasions, but last Friday's was their best performance.

Naturally, there were tears when the announcement was made that Brevard had received an excellent rating instead of superior. But they took it good naturedly, and there was one general comment:

"Just wait until next year."

And that's a good thought.

Out of the 39 band members making the trip, there were only five seniors. The rest of the band is comprised mostly of eighth and ninth graders.

It was by far the youngest band at Greensboro. And to our way of thinking, the best.

But of course, we are prejudiced.
