

Hospital Has Services Of Radiologists

The Transylvania Community hospital now has the services of two outstanding radiologists, John Bailey, the administrator, announces.

They are Dr. Karl F. Kaufman and Dr. Russell E. Herring, Jr., both of Hendersonville.

Mr. Bailey says the two specialists will be on duty each Tuesday at the local hospital for consultation and diagnostic work.

This added service is in cooperation with the medical staff, the Transylvania Medical Society, the Board of Trustees and the administration of the hospital.

The new service began on Tuesday of this week.

Dr. Kaufman is a diplomate of the American Board of Radiology, a member of the American College of Radiology, a member of the Radiological Society of North America and a member of the North Carolina Radiological society as well as other groups and societies.

He came to Hendersonville in 1948 from St. Vincent's Charity Hospital of Cleveland, Ohio. He was first at the old Patton hospital as radiologist and has been at the Pardee Memorial hospital since.

During World War II, he served in the Air Force.

He graduated at Ohio State College of Medicine in 1935, and served his internship at St. Luke's hospital in Cleveland.

Dr. Herring joined Dr. Kaufman in radiology in August of this year. He came to Hendersonville from Cleveland, Ohio.

Activities In Space Creates Excitement, Tracking Station

By Dorothy Wallace

A sense of excitement coupled with a great deal of activity surrounds what Transylvanians now refer to as the tracking station.

The host of engineers spend their time tracking satellites across the heavens, receiving information from them and relaying it to Goddard Space Flight center at Greenbelt, Maryland.

These days they actually follow a satellite as many as five or six times a day, depending on how fast the satellite orbits the earth.

It is a fascination experience to see and hear what actually happens during one of these "trackings".

Tuesday morning they tracked an 850 pound Nimbus, a weather satellite, orbiting some 525 miles above the earth.

Prior to the actual contact, there were numerous equipment checks. A dozen or so men with head phones plugged into panels with colorful lights flashing off and on maintained constant contact with Goddard. In the meantime, the antenna had been put into the predicted position to pick up the satellite. The engineers knew what to expect—they had already tracked this same satellite a couple of hours earlier.

The tracking station acquired the satellite, the time code from the satellite was checked

Curriculum At High School Vastly Expanded

The first Distributive Education program in Transylvania county has been established at Brevard senior high school, N. A. Miller, principal, announced today.

The Distributive Education curriculum is a part of the greatly expanded vocational program which is now in operation at the senior high school. The coordinator for the new course is Mary K. Scott, of Jore Lane, Woodland Terrace.

The Distributive Education program offers both preparatory and cooperative vocational training and has as its aim the preparation of young men and women for careers in some area of the distribution process. Preparatory students will concentrate on classroom instruction with some limited work experience provided. The student in the cooperative Distributive Education program will divide his time between school and on-the-job-training. Various business organizations in the community which are engaged in distribution of goods are participating in this new educational project.

Students are being accepted from the junior and senior classes on the basis of interest, aptitudes and career objectives. High school credit will be given —Turn to Page Seven

'Miss Daisy' Retires From Life At The Library

By Dorothy Wallace

A familiar face is missing from the Transylvania County Library, a face that has been a part of the library for about 28 years.

That face belongs to Miss Daisy Norton, herself a story-book character, who has helped thousands of Transylvanians who have visited the library.

Miss Daisy has not been at the library since early June. While she was on vacation, she fell and was hospitalized. A couple of weeks later she returned home, fell again, and is now recuperating in the local hospital from a broken hip.

For years, the library has been Miss Daisy's life, and this summer everyone has missed her.

"She is the most faithful, dependable person I've ever known," Mrs. Lehman Kapp, librarian, says. She has worked with Miss Daisy since 1944, and says she was never late for work and never missed a day.

Her familiar figure could be seen walking from her home at 627 Probart street to work every morning, bundled up against the early morning chill. For hers is a frail body, weighing less than 70 pounds, but her spirit and sense of duty are strong.

This neat, prim little woman loved perfume, and each day after lunch took time out to dab the fragrance at her ears, elbows, and wrists.

When Mrs. Kapp came to Brevard in 1944, Miss Daisy and Miss Annie Jean Gash were running the library. Miss Daisy helped prepare the books for shelves and circulation and did all the mending. Since she was the circulation librarian, everyone who used the library came in contact with her.

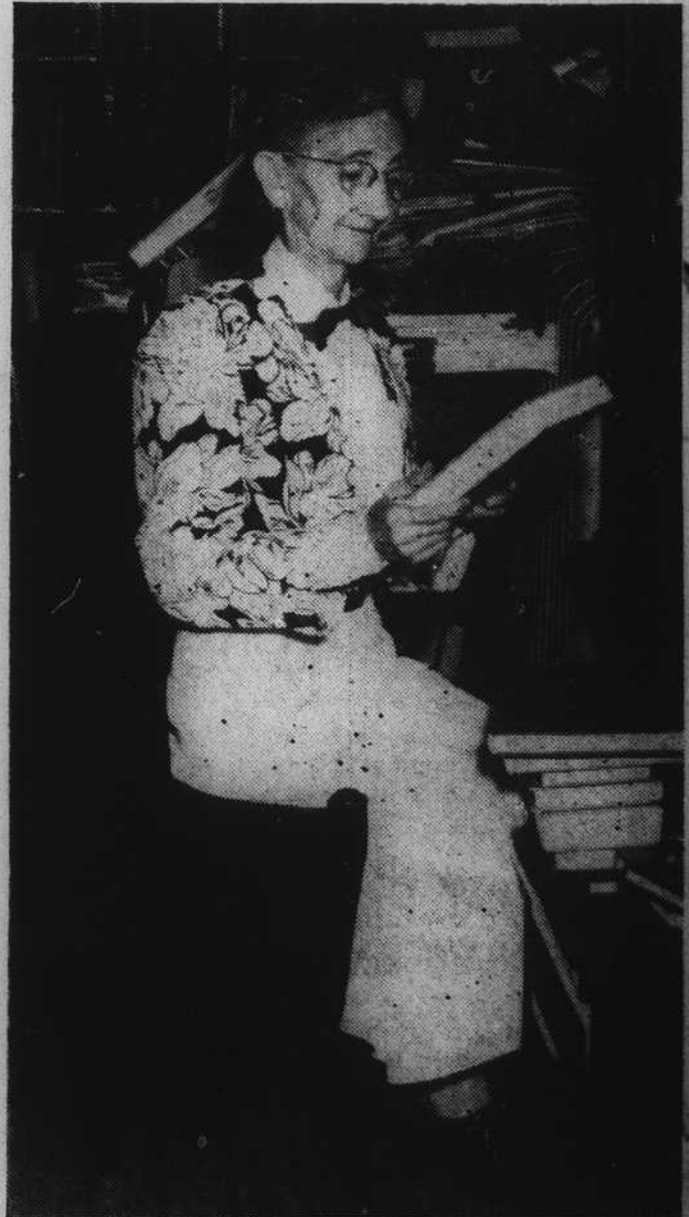

In December, 1956 the library was moved into the new building located beside the county court house, and the pace of work increased, perhaps a little too much to suit Miss Daisy.

One hectic afternoon she remarked, "I do wish we could take time out for afternoon tea."

Miss Daisy is a timid, soft-spoken person and was very kind to those using the library facilities. But on occasion she was known to be quite outspoken.

Several years ago, it seems a woman who was a regular customer was from California and constantly sang its praises. She talked about how beautiful California is and how much better the weather is, and then com —Turn to Page Five
