SENATOR SAM ERVIN SAYS

WASHINGTON — Proposals to modernize our military justice system are often consigned to a legislative pigeonhole. However, the "Military Justice Act of 1967," which I introduced with five other senators last week, appears ready for serious Senate consideration at this session.

For one thing, it is the product of long and painstaking work by the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights. As Chairman of this Subcommittee, I have conducted hearings upon many aspects of the bill since 1962 following hundreds of complaints from servicemen and their families about their experiences with military law.

Moreover, it has been almost two decades since the Uniform Code of Military Justice was enacted in 1950. Experience with the Code has now demonstrated a need for its revision. Until the enactment of the Code, the American in uniform had been at the mercy of legal procedures older than the Revolutionary War, procedures originally designed for foreign mercenaries—not for citizen soldiers loathe to give up the rights for which they are fighting. So antiquated and unjust was the old system, that after World War II a great protest came from returning veterans demanding reforms which would guarantee basic American principles of due process of law. They wanted a law which dispensed justice, not discipline.

Now, once again the country is in a period very much like that which existed in the 1940's. This year more than 400,000 men are fighting in Vietnam with the prospect that many more will be there fighting before the year is completed. This time, however, combat veterans need not be asked to tell their stories of injustice as returning villagers. The files of the Senate Subcommittee already contain ample proof that legislation is needed to reform our system of military law.

The 1967 proposal seeks to modernize the courts-martial system, provide the accused serviceman with the services of skilled legal counsel, and insure that his trial shall be presided over by full-time military judges. It would also incorporate procedures into the Code so that young men will not be stigmatized with the mark of "undesirable", "unfit", or "unsuitable", unless they first have had the benefit of their fundamental rights.

Today's bill is the product of earlier bills which I introduced in the 88th and 89th Congresses. The current measure was drafted in the months following the 1966 hearings to combine in one comprehensive package the proposed changes in military justice procedures which studies and hearings have shown to be essential to due process of law.

The prime purpose of the bill is to grant to millions of servicemen the best legal system we can devise to protect and judge them while they are in uniform. I can think of nothing more fitting as this country's expression of appreciation for the sacrifices these young citizens are called upon to make than to grant them the same rights they are defending.

In next week's column, I shall discuss the provisions of
