Mary Gwynn's Gay Valley Camp Has Well Rounded Program For Children

By Staff Writer

Nestled in a high green valley with the roaring sound of the cascading Connestee Falls nearby is a camp for young children that is well-adapted in all aspects to meet their needs and interests. Gay Valley, or Mary Gwynn's Camp as known by many, is indeed a child's haven. Co-educational with emphasis on the younger child, the camp's program is designed with equal stress on the arts as well as the physical skills.

Miss Gwynn, the director, feels that young children should be exposed to a variety of activities and then specialize afterwards. With this creative approach, many latent talents and interests are tapped and developed with the guidance and encouragement of the mature, experienced, and skilled staff that Gay Valley takes such great pride in employing. Their enthusiasm and devotion in working with the young children is literally contagious.

Exposed to the rustic side of life with unlimited opportunities for excitement and adventure, the child at Gay Valley grows not only in the specialized skills, but also in the appreciation, and he finds strength in his own character and personality by being able to express himself freely. The climate, the magnificent view, the hills, and the level land are all well-adapted to happy living away from the stresses, strains, and hurried pace of the adult world.

The camp area, covering 233 acres of land, has excellently equipped cabins. With the capacity of 100-125 children, the camp has many spots of fun—one in particular is the recreation building made of logs and rocks from the mountain sides.

All are instrumental in helping these boys and girls to learn to understand each other and to work cooperatively together in an effort to make this a better world.

Starting in 1935, the camp has all general activities. Assisting Miss Gwynn in her program is her sister-in-law, Mrs. P. H. Gwynn, Jr., who also serves as the music director.

This year Gay Valley is a camp with international interest, as several counselors and campers are from various foreign countries.

Among these is Miss Anne Breslin from Co. Dunegal, Ireland, who is a young school teacher and is spending some time in the United States. She wanted a camp experience, and she chose Gay Valley for the season. She toured the United States with the "Little Gaelic Singers." Mayumi Onuma from Japan is attending Mississippi State College for Women. The third person of alien distinction is Nadeem Francis, from Beirut, Lebanon, who is attending Warren Wilson College at Black Mountain. Another counselor is also from Lebanon. Sammy Dagir is a graduate of Berea college and has been a counselor at Gay Valley for five summers and is assisting with the Camp program.

After spending two years in Brazil, Mrs. Howard Boyd, of Staunton, Virginia, who is back at the camp and is a program director.

Also faithful in her service is Mrs. Edward M. Dowling, of Staunton, Virginia, who is rounding out her 20th year as business manager.

Gay Valley has a doctor in residence at all times. Serving the camp this year for two-week periods will be Dr. James J. Morris, Jr., Dr. R. F. Klein and Dr. George D. Wilbanks, Jr., from Duke Medical Center and Dr. Robert J. Senior from Chapel Hill.

Gay Valley has capacity enrollment this year with campers and counselors from 25 different states and several foreign countries.

Gay Valley also holds a reputable name for its site as a nature institute that is held one week each year prior to the camp's official opening. It is a training program in nature studies for camp counselors from the entire Southeast.
