Mark Price Reports On His Recent Travels In Russia. By Clarion Staff. Mark Price, who graduated from Brevard College last spring, has just returned to the U.S. after a 35 day study-travel seminar in the Soviet Union. The excursion, sponsored by the school of International Service, American University, had two primary objectives; 1. To give the participants greater insight into the Soviet Union as it is today. 2. To explore the feelings of the Christian community toward Marxism - Leninism as a major force in our time. Mark's enthusiasm was very evident as he related his impressions. He stated that Russia today is entirely different from the Russia of fifty years ago. Under the rule of the Czars, the Russians had been a starved, backward people. Now in 1967, their material needs are being satisfied. Yet, compared to the United States, the Soviet Union is still poor materially and economically. This is due to the fact that the two countries are separate types of societies. The U.S. revolves naturally in an atmosphere of free enterprise and private gain. The U.S.S.R., however, is a planned society in which the wants of the people depend upon the economy of the country. Thus, the economy must grow before the Russian people can be offered a higher living standard. Mark was deeply aware of this, and said he favored the trade between the United States and Russia. Broadened trading, he declared, would be a boost to both countries, economics and would also establish new channels for cooperative endeavor. The weeks he spent inside Russia were, in Mark's estimation, invaluable insofar as providing him with a many-faceted viewpoint of the conditions which prevail with the U.S. and Russia. For example, the literacy rate in the Soviet Union is almost 100%, far outdistancing the U.S. We are not hated in Russia, Mark said; rather, we are envied. The Russians for the most part are awed by the richness of the clothes worn by Americans. In a movie theater, for example, or at an opera, an American is easy to spot because of his extravagant wearing apparel. To sum up, Mark Price was fortunate enough to be able to live within and study firsthand a country whose political and social doctrines are completely alien to the American way of life. Though his experiences he learned that America is not the only nation in the world, that there are millions of people across the sea who think differently and, therefore, live differently. Mark Price likes Russia and the people who live there. His experience should be a guide to us all.
