Brevard Organ Builder Makes Chimes For High School Band

A. Douglas Wauchope of Brevard, organist and former organ maker, has made and donated a set of chimes to the Brevard Senior High School Band which will allow them to include various new compositions calling for bells to the repertoire.

A plaque on the new, 6 foot by 4 1/2 foot instrument reads:

"These chimes in grateful appreciation to the Brevard Senior High School Band and its dedicated leader, John D. Eversman; by Arthur Douglas Wauchope on behalf of his children Barbara, Douglas, Jr., and Donald, former Members of the Band."

Says Mr. Wauchope: "I feel that few communities are blessed with a high school having such a standard of excellence as ours. Fewer still can boast of a band like the Brevard Senior High, and fewer still, if any, have such a dedicated band director as John Eversman."

"Chief" is not only a band director. Anyone with a reasonable background in theory, orchestration and conducting can wave a baton in front of a bunch of kids and produce music which would be acceptable to many people.

"But 'Chief' doesn't stop there. Being the great person he is, he loves every one of the boys and girls who came under his baton and builds not only their musical proficiency but their characters as well. That makes all the difference between just an average band and the very great ones that Brevard High under his direction, and with recent assistance from Miss Georgie Honson, has produced."

According To Statistics White Collar Jobs Gain In County

To what extent has the employment picture in Transylvania County changed in recent years? How much job shifting has there been, due to automation?

What proportion of working people in the local area are now in white collar occupations and what proportion in blue collar?

National surveys by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, combined with data from the Department of Commerce, shed some light on the subject.

They indicate that locally, as in most other areas, there have been many adjustments in the employment situation since 1960.

Of the 5,000 men and women who were employed locally at that time, 1,570 were in white collar jobs, the figures show. The rest were in blue collar or service occupations or were employed on farms.

Most noticeable, in Transylvania County, has been the substantial increase since then in the proportion of white collar jobs. The rise, in the 10-year period, is estimated at 16.7 percent.

This was in line with the growing demand for clerical, management, professional, technical and sales personnel. These white collar occupations have created opportunities for a large majority of the newcomers in the local labor force.

Classified as blue collar in the government's reports are machinists, craftsmen, construction workers, factory operatives, transportation workers and the like.

In Transylvania County, due to the adjustments that have taken place, it is estimated that white collar workers now constitute approximately 36 percent of the local labor force.

The finding is that the pay scale of the average unionized blue collar worker has been rising much faster lately than that of the white collar worker.

As a result, the big difference in spending potential and living standards that once distinguished the two has become less evident. Blue collar workers, however, are more susceptible to layoffs than white collar.

Latest Figures Give Transylvania Population Gain Of 13.4 Percent

Here's The Story:
1960 — 16,372
1970 — 18,571

More recent figures on the results of the 1970 Census show that Transylvania county had a gain of 13.4 percent during the past 10 years.

Earlier this fall, it was reported that the county's gain was slightly over 11%. Final figures will not be released until January, 1971.

The latest count shows that Transylvania had 18,571 at the end of the 1970 census, as compared with 16,372 in 1960.

The 11th Congressional District — 16 Western North Carolina counties, including Transylvania — totals show an increase of only 2.2 percent.

Joel New, Director of the United States Department of Commerce Library at Greensboro, told The Times this week that corrections have been fed into the Census Bureau's computers but have not been processed.

The Census Bureau compiles its head count in three stages—a preliminary figure, an "advance final" total, and a final figure. The preliminary figure does not include members of the armed forces living overseas, so "advance final" totals are almost sure to be slightly higher in virtually every town and county across the land.

Final results were first expected to be released on December 31st, but Mr. New says it will now be about six weeks before the official figures will be announced.
