

Two-Week Camp For Diabetic Children Set Again, Eagles Nest Camp

Unique Session Is Slated From August 8 To 22

Summer camp is an experience to treasure for most kids.

In the past, youngsters who had diabetes were required to watch their diet and activity carefully and usually weren't able to attend regular camps.

But because of a group of interested parents and physicians, North Carolina can now offer diabetic children a special camp designed for their needs.

The Carolinas Camp for Diabetic Children (CCDC), in its fourth year of operation, will be held this summer from August 8th to 22nd at Eagles Nest campsite near Brevard. Sponsored by the North and South Carolina Diabetes Associations, the camp is open to all diabetic youngsters from both states between the ages of 6 and 15.

At the CCDC, children swim, hike, dance, play softball, learn crafts, and get into everything else that kids usually do at camp.

But, added to the traditional routine, are lessons on the injection of insulin, management of diet, and checking body sugar levels, all very important to successful control of diabetes. The idea is to teach the children to be more self-reliant in taking care of their illness.

The most interesting part of the camp, though, from the kids' point of view, is meeting other children with diabetes.

"I used to think that I was strange or something since I have to take a shot every morning," one nine-year-old said at last year's camp. "I was surprised to see so many other kids have diabetes, too."

Physicians, nurses, and dieticians from the Duke University Medical Center in Durham, the Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem, the University of North Carolina, and the University of South Carolina Medical School make up the camp's medical staff. Dr. Harry K. Delcher, a fellow in endocrinology at Duke, is medical director.

The CCDC got its start four years ago when a group of Greenville, S. C., parents of diabetic children found that their youngsters were being turned away from camps in other states because of space limitations. The parents joined forces to form the Greenville Lay Society of the South Carolina Diabetes Association and shortly thereafter began plans for a camp in the Carolinas the following summer.

Parents of campers pay only as much as they can afford to send their child to camp. The North Carolina Diabetes Association will provide financial aid for children who could not otherwise go to camp.

Dr. Davis Reviews The Academic Year

In one short week the academic year 1970-71 will come to an end for Brevard College. As with any year, it is a mixture of success and failure, of good things and disappointments. We began the year filled with hope and great potential. Some of these died along the way. Others continue to grow and hold promise for the future.

Academically, Brevard continues to hold its place of excellence. Your diploma carries with it a distinction that is recognized by the finest colleges in our state and region. During the year a number of exciting changes have been made in the curriculum and will be in effect next year. The faculty have been concerned to make the curriculum as stimulating and useful as possible. I believe they have accomplished this in an admirable way.

Beyond the classroom, the single most important event was the completion of the Sims Building and the beginning of extra-curricular activities through this new facility. A more creative and wholesome social life awaits future generations of Brevard College students.

There have been sad events too. Some of your classmates have died, or dropped out of school, or given up for one reason or another. We have been aware of a supporting and concerned community at such times. In a more positive way we need a community which emphasizes achievement in academic and in personal matters.

In keeping with this is the need for the student leadership to work more creatively for an attitude on campus in which students take more seriously the educational opportunities that are theirs at Brevard. First emphasis must be placed on academic achievement. It is my hope that this will increase.
