On Technicality

Three Brevard Youths Arrested In "Tree Episode" Are Released

The three Brevard youths arrested and charged with attempting to pass illegal drugs to inmates of the Transylvania County Jail have been released, according to information received from county court officers.

The charges against John Pigeon, David Rickards, and David Ladd, all 17, were dropped last week on what amounts to a technicality. The drugs which the youths were attempting to pass through the jail window are not illegal under North Carolina state law.

These same drugs are illegal under Federal law; but, this being a case where only a Federal law is involved, it is up to Federal authorities to prosecute, according to District Court sources.

The three youths were arrested about 10:30 on the evening of May 17 when Sheriff's Deputies caught them attempting to push drugs through a second floor jail window.

John Pigeon had climbed a tree beside the jail and was using a long stick to push the drugs through the window screen when apprehended. The other two youths were on the ground at the base of the tree helping.
