Rosman High Announces Two New Curriculums

Parents of students in Rosman High School English and social studies courses will be hearing about the new "mini-course" curriculums this fall.

During the past year and this summer, the English and social studies faculty has planned and developed a new approach to replace the traditional year-long courses.

Students had much of the responsibility for planning the mini-course curriculums. Informal surveys of the types of courses the students were interested in were tabulated and the faculties then planned a series of courses based on these requests in addition to topics essential for a full education.

Twenty-four nine-week English courses and eleven nine-week social studies courses will be offered. Some of the course titles in English are: "Eve's

Many Faces", "I Kant Spel", "Creative Writing", and "Hollywood Comes to Rosman". The social studies courses will include: "Kilroy Was Here", "The War That Isn't A War", and "When Knighthood Was In Flower".

This new approach to English and social studies offers several advantages to the student. First of all, courses are centered on student interests, resulting in greater enthusiasm for learning. The mini-courses in both English and social studies have also been grouped by ability level, with students registering for a block of four courses. Each student was personally advised during last spring's registration so that he chose the block of courses best suited to his needs and interests.

The student who has difficulty within the traditional curriculum designed for the "average" student will be working on his level, and will be taking special reading courses offered for the first time next year. The advanced student will also benefit from the new approach, as he will be challenged by courses taking him beyond the level of classwork which has often bored him in the past. Just as student ability and interest varies, so does that of the teacher in different areas, so the new curriculum will allow the teacher to choose to instruct those courses in which he or she feels most capable, thus benefitting the students with his or her special knowledge and ability.

Complete course outlines were developed this summer by Mrs. Jane Williams of the Rosman High English faculty, and by Mr. Lee Powell and James Howell of the social studies faculty.

Mr. Larry Tucker, Supervisor of English Instruction for North Carolina, visited with Mrs. Williams recently, and gave his full support to Rosman's program.

This fall, Rosman will become the smallest school in North Carolina using the mini-course approach, and visitors from across the State are expected. Parents are invited to come in and observe the new programs in operation.

National Farm Safety Week, 1971

Primitive man's first discoveries about cultivating the land came by chance, and for thousands of years thereafter agriculture progressed only slowly out of the realm of guesswork. Even in the early days of this Nation, when we were a people of farmers and planters, the process of coaxing life out of the earth remained far more an art than a science. But today American agriculture has become a fully realized technology largely subject to human planning and control — a bountiful producer of food, clothing and the makings of the good life for America and the world.

Thus there is sharp irony in the fact that this great industry, so accomplished in the scientific nurture of plant and animal life, remains among the industries in which human life is most precarious and accident rates are highest. The farm and ranch environment abounds in potential hazards — powerful machinery, exposed working conditions, physically demanding jobs — but experience has shown that caution, common sense, and protective equipment can do much to counter them and keep accidents and injuries to a minimum. All who live and work on America's farms and ranches owe it to themselves, their families, and the nation that depends on them, to put safety first. Let us set the goal of eliminating chance from rural life just as we have learned to exclude it from agricultural production.

NOW, THEREFORE, I RICHARD NIXON, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate the week of July 25, 1971, as National Farm Safety Week. I urge farm families and all in the rural community to make every effort to reduce accidents occurring at work, home in recreation and on the highway.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred seventy-one and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred ninety-fifth.
