

State Libraries Services Network Made Available To Brevard College

The James Addison Jones Library at Brevard College has been granted direct access to the North Carolina Libraries Services Network of the North Carolina State Library effective October 1st.

Public libraries have been using this unique service since February, 1968, and some other types of libraries were given access to it in 1969 and 1970.

Now libraries of two-year colleges and technical institutes will have direct, around-the-clock access to the State Library via Inward Wide Area Telephone Service (IN-WATS). An automatic answering and recording device will accept calls when the State Library is closed.

The principle use college and technical institute libraries will make of IN-WATS Information Service will be to identify locations of materials prior to requesting them through interlibrary loan. The State Library will relay such locations requests via TWX (Teletype-writer Exchange Service) to the Interlibrary Center Catalog at the University of North Carolina Library in Chapel Hill and will call location information received back to the library initiating the request.

"This will mean a reduction of at least two days in interlibrary loan transactions," according to Philip Ogilvie, State Librarian.

"It will make unnecessary much expensive duplication of specialized materials in all types of libraries," he adds.

North Carolina Libraries Services Network is funded by the State Library using State and Federal funds with supplementary assistance from the major academic libraries of the Research Triangle Area. It is reached by dialing a toll-free restricted number that connects with the IN-WATS desk at the State Library. Professional librarians receive and process all calls received — both bibliographic locations requests and reference questions.

"Public and academic libraries have found IN-WATS Information Service quick and reliable in these days when there is a note of urgency in every informational request," says Mrs. Arline Butler Campbell, Librarian.

Pertelote Staff Holds Workshop NARC Poll Is Taken On Campus

On September 11, three Pertelote staff members, Barbara Young, Dick Sanderson, and Mary Helen Huggins attended a workshop for school yearbook workers at Furman University in Greenville, S. C.

The event was sponsored by Keyes Printing Company. The morning session focused on layout and photography. The afternoon session was concerned with general yearbook production.

Other college students and high school students from Western N. C. and S. C. also attended.

Judging from a poll taken a few days ago, opinion concerning narcotic agents on campus is extremely one-sided.

In talking to students and teachers about the very controversial subject, there were no undecided opinions. The people asked were either decidedly for or against the idea. Out of fifty-six students and three members of the faculty confronted with this major issue, only four people were in favor of narcotic agents on school grounds.

When confronted with the issue at hand, one response was this: "Every person has the individual freedom to do with his life as he pleases. As long as his personal actions don't harm anyone else's well being, he should be left alone to live his life the way he thinks it should be lived. Undercover work should be left to the K.G.B. in the Soviet Union. That's something the Communists would do."

Another response to the question: "A few of my friends are narcs right here on campus; and let me tell you it's the best thing a college can do. Drugs as a whole are not good for anyone that consumes them, and with narcs on campus, drugs are kept down to a minimum. If these kids think they're smart enough to take the stuff, they ought to be smart enough and big enough to face the consequences. And for the ones that do get caught, good riddance."
