MADAME by Patrick O'Hig- gins. An intimate biography of Helena Rubenstein.

WHOM THE GODS WOULD DESTROY by Richard Powell. Thirty-two hundred years ago, the people of a shining civiliza- tion set out to prove the truth of the saying that whom the Gods would destroy, they first make mad. The civiliza- tion is now called Mycenaean. The madness was the Trojan War.

HIDDEN VALLEY OF THE

SMOKIES by Ross E. Hutch- ins. The author, a naturalist- photographer, takes the reader to his Hidden Valley and shares its secrets and primitive beau- ty in vivid descriptions and re- markable close up photographs.

THE DAHOMEN by Frank Yerby. Frank Yerby, the master story - teller, reconstructs the lost, glorious world of a great African nation in the early nineteenth century.

THIS BAFFLING WORLD by John Godwin. A documented account of the greatest puz- zlements of all time - unex- plained natural phenomena, historical happenings that still mystify, and people of extra- ordinary talents which defy comprehension.

The Children's Bookshelf

—By—
DR. JOSEPHINE J. CURTG

From all the advance pub- licity on books slated for pub- lication during the next three months it would seem that read- ers can expect top-notch books written by well-known authors.

This month, from Macmillan comes another Lawrence Prin- gle book, "Ecology: Science of Survival" ($4.95). Similar in format to his highly-praised and thought-provoking account, "One Earth, Many People," Mr. Pringle's new book promises to be as timely and as lively-writ- ten as his other one.

Written specifically for the junior-high student, this com- prehensive introduction to ecology will, if it equals its predecessor, be filled with maps, charts, illustrations, and photographs, and be written in the unmistakable Pringle style — simple, direct, and interest- ing.

Also from Macmillan and slated for immediate publica- tion is another modern classic by the author of "One Monday Morning", 1969 Caldecott win- ner, Uri Shulvitz.

Heralded as a "fantastic pic- ture book" for ages 3 to 6, "Oh What a Noise", ($4.95) is a fresh look at an age-old topic: a little boy trying to postpone going to bed.

Imagining a cacophony of sound that includes, among di- verse and amusing things, whales in the bath tub, the little boy almost succeeds in staying up late.

Promising to be both colorful and humorous, "Oh What a Noise", will also be a book that teachers of young children will find valuable in teaching sounds and pronunciation.

Good news for young readers who were enthralled by the highly-successful "Marcel Marceau Alphabet Book". A lively follow-up to this colorful and instructive picture book is George Mendoza's full color "The Marcel Marceau Counting Book". (Doubleday, $5.95).

In this enchanting picture book, the great Marceau por- trays a series of occupations from astronaut to king, wearing a hat appropriate to each. And if this second Marceau book is half as successful as its prede- cessor, young readers will learn their numbers with little effort and will be entertained as they learn.

Three fall publications from G. P. Putnam's Sons that promise hours of reading fun for the 4-to-8 year-old are "Lorenzo Bear and Company", another delightful tale by Jan Wahl,

"The Crocodile Who Wouldn't Be King", a statement about peaceful coexistence and one's individuality in a complex so- ciety, by the popular German writer Janosch; and "Hercules", a dramatic picture book by author-illustrator Hardie Gram- lky.

A September release that no teenager or his parents should miss is "Go Ask Alice", (Prentice-Hall, $4.95). A document- ary novel, based upon the ac- tual diary of a 15-year-old drug user, "Go Ask Alice", offers no solutions to the drug problem; however, it does detail the nightmarish horrors experienc- ed by the young girl who real- izes too late that drugs solve no problems, only create great- er ones.

Shocking, pathetic, and thought-provoking, "Go Ask Alice", for obvious reasons, does not reveal the author. But any young person who has "freaked out" on drugs will know that the story is true— else how could the young au- thor know the problems and dif- ficulties resulting from taking drugs?

C. Walter Hodges, the well-known writer and critic whose "Shakespeare's Theatre" re- ceived acclaim in theatrical and literary circles, updates the classics for readers ages 8 to 14.

"The Rime of the Ancient Mariner", Coleridge's dramatic poem, and "The Pied Piper of Hamelin", Browning's well-known classic, are Mr. Hodges' first of, hopefully, a series of classics. To be released in Oc- tober by Coward-McCann, each of these favorites includes, along with the original text, Mr. Hodges' highly-original and colorful illustrations.

A closer examination of the advance publicity on books shows that animal stories, bi- oographies, mysteries, and sci- ence books headline fall pub- lications with fantasy, problem- solving fiction, and "how-to" books ranking second.

One bit of disturbing news, though, Poetry and drama for children seem to have been overlooked. In fact, from all releases and fall catalogues, it would appear that poets and playwrights took a vacation last winter in that only two-poetry anthologies and one collection of plays for children are slated for publication within the next couple of months.
