What Children Take To School

FEELINGS I

When Sammy went to school this year he went with the feelings of anticipation, joy and interest. Because his first year had been one in which he felt good he could go back to school feeling content with himself and with school and the world.

But what about Jimmy? Last year Jimmy was faced each day with another failure. When he went home his parents fussed that he was not learning and his feeling of failing increased. Each day became more of a burden and Jimmy began to push the other kids in the lunch line, to be too rough on the playground and on the school bus. Often Jimmy didn't know why he did these things but somehow he felt some satisfaction when the teacher reprimanded him. The days when Jimmy was sent to the principal's office and made to do his work there were red letter days for him. And finally, when his mother was called to school by his teacher and the report back meant a whipping by Daddy, Jimmy really felt good. This year Jimmy is repeating the same pattern.

Terry is an excellent student who has been a joy to his parents and his teachers. But for the past three weeks Terry's work has been poorly done, he sits staring out of the window and is cross with the other boys and girls. Terry is worried. Mom and Dad had always been fun until lately. But every night now he hears them talking in low, angry tones and finally a door slams or he hears his Mom crying. The breakfast table is a gloomy place, with Mom listlessly putting the food on the table and Dad scowling behind the morning paper. Neither one of them has much to say to him. And evenings are worse because Dad doesn't come in for supper and Mom is artificially happy. Terry doesn't know what is happening, but he is worried.

Susan is another good student. Her behavior in the classroom has been very bad. She tells stories about people. Shows little respect for the other children and her teachers and at times is just plain snippy. Her stories are full of horror, blood, and killing. Susan is a very angry child.

Gary and Randy, who are almost sixteen and in the ninth grade, can think of only one thing; their coming birthdays so they can quit school. Gary has had trouble in school for many years. His pattern of behavior has been something like Jimmy's. Now he can think only about how wonderful it will be to not have to go to school. Randy has been an average student but school has been something he had to do. He resents having to "take his responsibility" as his parents say. He resents this because his parents have not taken their responsibility. His father never has any time for him, is always down at the Club having a drink. His mother sees him only as she files in and out from one meeting to a bridge game or the golf course. So Randy feels he will be better off "down at the beach", where he can get a job and live in his own way.

Melissa is sixteen, going steady and planning to get married. She has to get away from home! Mother is a snoop and doesn't trust her. She is always telling Melissa what it was like when she was a girl. Melissa has to iron her clothes and help clean up on Saturday. Some evenings she has to get supper. But mostly she has to get out of that house because of all the little brats of brothers and sisters. Why should she have to take care of them?

What do the children take to school? Feelings, good and bad. Anger, worry, shame of failure, joy, resentment, longings for freedom, concern and anxiety are all carried to school and affect the progress of the students. What feelings did your child start out with today?

Alan Edward Turpin
Just one year ago today God called you away. He needed another little angel up in Heaven, So He took you, and you were only seven. He just loaned you to us, for a little while, With your big brown eyes and your cute little smile. They say time heals all things, But we miss you today, same as we missed you then.

Father and Mother,
Mr. and Mrs. Zeb Turpin
Brother, David
Grandmother, Mrs. Ed Sentell
