What else can you buy today for less than you paid ten years ago?

Today—even with the recent rate increases—the average cost per kilowatt-hour to Duke's residential customers is less than ten years ago, or anytime before that. In 1960, for example, our average residential customer paid 1.97¢ per kilowatt-hour.

But in 1970, he paid only 1.73¢ per kwh. Our most recent figures—for the 12 months ending August 31, 1971—show an average cost of 1.82¢ per kwh. Your electric bill is higher mainly because you use more electricity today. You'll be using even more in the future. We're building now to provide all the electricity you need at the lowest possible cost.
