Beverly Sills Leads Mothers' March Against Birth Defects

By PATRICIA O'CONNELL

The Mothers' March, now in its 22nd year as a social force against crippling childhood disease, continues to draw top leadership.

Beverly Sills, internationally acclaimed opera star, is national chairman of the Mothers' March against birth defects for The National Foundation-March of Dimes. She succeeds actress Jane Wyatt, who will expand her work with the health organization as national chairman of volunteer services.

Miss Sills, a leading coloratura soprano with the New York City Opera Company, has deep-rooted feelings about her role in the Mothers' March. In private life, she is Mrs. Peter Greenough, wife of a distinguished journalist. They know too well the anguish of birth defects. Their daughter, Muffy, 12, a bright, beautiful girl, was born deaf. Their son, Peter Jr., 10, is mentally retarded.

"We used to ask, 'why us?'" she says. "Now we ask, 'why them?' Medical science offers such hope today that other parents, ultimately, will be spared these sorrows."

Working Chairman

Despite her rigorous schedule, Miss Sills has talked with Mothers' March leaders in cities where she has had singing engagements these past months to learn firsthand how they are directing their energies to overcome birth defects. About a quarter of a million babies are born with physical and mental damage every year in this country.

She also has met with scientists and physicians who direct March of Dimes research and Medical Service Programs around the country.

Contributions from the Mothers' March help support these programs, professional and public health education, and community service projects. Funds also go to The Salk Institute in San Diego.

SHE SANG IT WITH FLOWERS. Opera star Beverly Sills, national Mothers' March chairman against birth defects, visits the March of Dimes Service Program at New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center.

Mothers' March leaders are anxious to build public awareness about medical progress in preventing, treating and controlling congenital diseases. This year, some million and a half volunteers in about 2,700 March of Dimes chapters are distributing booklets that emphasize possible environmental hazards to the unborn child. The booklet also has other useful information about steps that couples can take that reduce the risk of having children born with birth defects.

In a number of communities, Marching Mothers will circulate material about Rh blood incompatibility disease and the Rh vaccine which could end this source of birth defects.

For many volunteers, prevention of birth defects is a year-round concern. Mrs. Kenneth Stults of Flint, Mich., assists patients at a prenatal care clinic co-sponsored by her chapter, the health department and women's service organizations. She helped plan the clinic and is a weekly "regular."

Then there is Mrs. Irving Saltzman, Mothers' March co-chairman for the borough of Queens, New York City. She has organized and participated in volunteer programs for prenatal care clinics at Queens Hospital Center and Coney Island Hospital, and arranged health education projects for local high schools. Mrs. Saltzman is a district leader of B'nai B'rith Women, who co-sponsor "Operation Stork," a nationwide prenatal care program with the March of Dimes.

Mrs. Ray C. Freeman of Seattle, Wash., has been coordinating medical and nonmedical activities at the March of Dimes Birth Defects Center, University Hospital, since it opened in 1961. Volunteers provide many services: typing, talking with, and listening to, patients and their parents, and meeting families at airports and bus stations when they come from out of town. Volunteer registered nurses work directly with the hospital staff.

"The center is geared to education," she says. "Each fall we send invitations to high schools to visit the hospital. The project is mostly aimed at making them better informed as future parents."

Beautyrest mattresses, there's one right for you. Because everyone has a different idea of just how firm a mattress should be, we now make Beautyrest mattresses in four different firmnesses. Besides Normal Firm, there are three Back Care models: Extra Firm, Extra Firm Plus, and Super Firm. But because firmness alone can't support you properly, every Beautyrest is also flexible. Separate coils conform to your shape, so a Beautyrest can give you more support, more comfort, more than any other firm mattress. Come in and try all four Beautyrest firmnesses.
