"Will Any Gentleman?" Now Playing At The Flat Rock Playhouse

"Will Any Gentleman?" returns to the Flat Rock Playhouse stage this week in a revival by the Vagabond Players of their biggest hit of almost two decades ago when the most popular play of its season.

The farce by Vernon Sylvaine, who gave the theatre another Playhouse hit in "As Long As They're Happy," had its American premiere at Flat Rock in 1955 after a smash hit three-year run in London.

The plot concerns a timid, sedate and very conventional family man, Henry Stirling, who happens into a nightclub and is half hypnotized by a professional mesmerist before he escapes. Henry, hitherto a devoted husband, finds that his primal urges are now surfacing in completely unpredictable ways, causing complications that ensure an evening of unadulterated merriment. Managing Director Robroy Farquhar states, "It is the funniest comedy the Vagabonds have ever presented."

The current revival of "Will Any Gentleman?" has one member of the original cast: W. C. 'Mut' Burton, making his first appearance of the 1973 season, plays Dr. Smith. Henry Stirling will be portrayed by Richard Folmer, and his playboy brother Charley by Ralph Redpath.

Other important roles are taken by Helen Bragdon as Mrs. Whittle, Henry's mother-in-law; Donna Elliott as Beryl, the maid; Margarete Kilness as Henry's wife Florence; Walter Williamson as Mendoza, the hypnotist; Donna Drake as his assistant; and Ann Spencer as Charley's fiancée. Former Vagabond Ralph Kerns, who re-joins the troupe after an absence of several seasons, will be seen as Stanley Jackson, a bank manager.

Anita Grannis is the director. The settings are designed and executed by Walter O'Rourke, assisted by the technical staff. Dennis Maulden is the stage manager, Kate Bertram is property mistress, and Aline Bowles is costume mistress.

The Vagabond Players, since their inception in New York City in 1937, have given 2,959 performances in 305 productions, and played to nearly three million people. Performances are through Saturday evenings at 8:30, with a matinee on Saturday at 2:30. Flat Rock Playhouse, the State Theatre of North Carolina, is located three miles south of Hendersonville on U. S. 25. When in need of job printing call The Transylvania Times.
