

"Back To Sunday School" Drive Begins In County

The Transylvania County Ministerial Association has adopted the theme, "Back to Sunday School in Transylvania County," for a Sunday School attendance campaign during the months of January, February and March.

The purpose of the campaign, according to Rev. Marlin Mull, pastor of the Brevard Wesleyan Church, chairman, is to stimulate attendance on a regular basis at Sunday school or church; and for those not presently enrolled, to urge them to enroll and become regular participants in the Christian education program of their churches.

Other committee members, who will launch the campaign on WPNF Radio Friday, Jan. 3, at 11:30 a.m. on "Citizens Speak," include Rev. Duke Ison, pastor of the Rosman United Methodist Church, radio chairman; John Smart, director of Sunday School at the First Baptist Church, rally chairman; and Mrs. Peggy Hina, director of Christian education at the First United Methodist Church, newspaper chairman.

A Sunday school rally will be held Jan. 5 at Calvary Baptist Church at 3 p.m. Speaker will be Dr. O. Dale Emory, general secretary, Department of Sunday Schools of the Wesleyan Church, of Marion, Inc. The rally is open to the public. Those who work in the Christian education of their local churches are especially urged to attend.

These funds were lent to the Corporation pursuant to a commitment previously issued by the Bank to finance the cost of the construction of the company's executive office building and distribution center near Charlotte, which facility was completed in May 1974.

First 'R' Still Has Educational Priority

Reading continues to be the North Carolina Department of Public Instruction's number one priority and, according to State Superintendent Craig Phillips, creating the right kind of reading environment is one key to overcoming pupil failure in reading.

Before steps can be taken to improve the classroom environment for reading, teachers need to determine what kinds of factors might interfere with an individual pupil's ability to read, explained Mary Purnell, director of the DPT's Division of Reading.

"It is imperative that teachers get to know as much about students as possible before they devise individual reading programs," she said. "This can be done through informal classroom observation as well as through standardized reading tests."

Next, teachers need to as flexible as possible when teaching reading. "If one approach doesn't work," noted Mrs. Purnell, "teachers will have to think of alternative ways in which children can learn and get certain concepts other than relying strictly one approach such as use of basal textbooks."

If a child is still experiencing learning problems, television programs, films, film strips, and numerous hands-on materials are often used to teach concepts. Through exposure to a wide variety of audio-visual materials, explained Mrs. Purnell, a child can progress and learn even if she or he cannot read well.

Some teachers use incentives to stimulate interest in reading. At Welcome Elementary School, Davidson County, for example, pupils are rewarded for the number of books they read.

Each child who reads 100 books receives a T-shirt which says "I have read 100 books." For reading 200 books, students at this school get a ticket for a free lunch at a local restaurant, and for reading 250 books, each student receives a blue ribbon which says "super reader." A collection of stories written by students might be turned into new reading materials for the classroom. "Children like to read stories they've written and will often read student-authored books while they shy away from a basal textbook," Mrs. Purnell pointed out.

For some pupils, classroom games effectively teach reading and word skills. "Checkers" can be a board game in which players move checkers to different squares only after identifying a word printed in the square. "Old Maid" becomes a card game where players make pairs by matching words.

Whatever method is used, noted Mrs. Purnell, the basis any good reading program is to help children feel good about themselves and about reading.

To assist teachers to meet the reading needs of students, the Division of Reading, says Mrs. Purnell, includes placement of reading resource teachers in every school in the State; development of more student teaching opportunities in teaching reading; and development of more in-service activities for the current classroom teachers.

Other objectives are to develop ways to diagnose student needs to supplement standardized tests and to search for wider availability and use of a variety of reading materials for different reading levels, she concluded.
