

Aldermen Break With City Over Inspection

Chairman Bill Ives arrived at the meeting, and told the aldermen that what they had done (hiring a new inspector for the city) was illegal.

"I was stunned when Mrs. Hahn called me to tell me you were breaking our contract. You can't do that. The contract calls for you to give written notice 90 days before dissolving our agreement. You have not done that yet. I have received no written notice.

"This was the first cooperative venture between the city and the county. Gentlemen, I am stunned by your action."

The mayor asked City Attorney Jack Hudson to look over the contract, and after doing so, Mr. Hudson agreed with Mr. Ives that 90 days notice was required.

Alderman Cornelius Hunt then told Mr. Ives: "It is unfortunate for the city and county that this was aired in the newspapers instead of us sitting down together to talk it out."

Mr. Ives replied that the city had broken the contract and hired the new inspector before he was even notified they were considering such a move. "This was the whole problem. There was never any communication between us in this matter. There was a pure lack of communication."

The aldermen then voted to instruct Mrs. Hahn to give notice to the county in writing that it was dissolving the contract, and that for the next 90 days it would use the new building inspector it has hired in condemnation work.

They refused to consider the proposal to hire a new inspector jointly.

In another action the aldermen, on recommendation of Fire Chief Joe Picklesimer, named Gordon Byrd an assistant fire chief with a salary of $50 a month.

Alderman Hunt mentioned the hazardous condition of the railroad trestle which over passes the entrance into a section of the Brevard Housing Authority's low-rent

Olin Names Energy Director In Crisis

First priorities, he said, are to develop meaningful, practical and quantitative measurements of energy usage, and to determine reasonably challenging energy saving goals for the separate operations.

"With the ability to measure and with established goals, we can determine where we are going and what we are doing in respect to the conservation of energy. Pure economics gives this high priority," he said.

"I assure you, this program is of utmost concern at the group level."

The appointment of a group energy director was in response to the complexities of the energy problems and the problems of identifying and accomplishing solutions. Baldwin said that while the director will recommend group guidelines, objectives and programs, each plant continues to have primary responsibility for its own energy programs, just as it does in environmental matters.

The new Director of Energy and Environmental Control has been with Olin since July 1966, soon after earning his Master's degree in Sanitary Engineering at Harvard University.

He received a B. S. degree in Civil Engineering at the

He was told the Southern Railroad has refused to do anything about the trestle's condition.

Attorney Hudson was asked to write a letter to the railroad, demanding the repairs.

Flood Hazard Survey Begun For Brevard

the city limits to which a flood might be expected to rise within a period of 100 years. History of flooding, stream flow factors and other data will be used in arriving at these elevations, Mr. Mason said.

The 100-year flood level, which means a one per cent chance that the water level would reach that high in any one year, is the national standard method of operation, he said.

Any homes or buildings below that level when the survey is complete will continue to receive subsidized flood insurance, Mr. Mason said. "But the insurance rate on any homes built after the survey would be exorbitant."

And a city ordinance, he said, will require that any building's first floor must be above the 100-year flood level, constructed if necessary on a high foundation.

The next meeting to be held in connection with the survey, Mr. Mason said, will be one for public discussion, to obtain public opinions and to explain the meaning of the one per cent flood chance.

The third meeting will provide an opportunity for the T. V. A. to present preliminary findings to the public, with the fourth meeting the presentation of the final draft and maps of the survey to be used in establishing future flood insurance rates.

Mr. Kerr said that in addition to the 100-year-flood level standard, there is a 500-year standard which includes property where flood waters might conceivably reach at some time during that period.

Construction will be permissible in such an area, he said, but the insurance rate on building located within this zone will be higher.

Sugar Mountain Tale Crystalizes

"Course, after a time the sugar was mostly mined out, and they closed the shaft when the country store began to lay in supplies of the commercial stuff. But before the trees and underbush could grow up over the tracks, the ski people came in and started installing that lift you see operating.

"Next time you go to the top ask the lift attendant up there where the mouth to the sugar mine is. Who knows—price of sugar being what it is and us with these mild winters of late, they may give some thought to startin' up that sugar cart again!"

Folk-Ways rounds out this installment with what Edwin Judkins, a regular contributor, calls ditties and couplets. His note of introduction follows:

"Ditties and couplets have always intrigued me. Some of the following might be verses of a song as far as I know.

A sheep shells corn with the rattle of his horn, and I never saw the likes since I have been born.

Some like cabbage, some like kale. I like possum, all but its tail.

When you buy meat you get bone; When you buy land, you get stone.

"My father-in-law, Mr. Robert Gray, who was city engineer for Bristol, Virginia, for many years like to sing this one:

When I was in Ireland I'll have you know I took six little boys to milk an old ewe. Twi at the head and twi at the hams, And twi little boys to keep off the lambs."

If readers know tall tales,
