General Lost Battle, Life; But Won Honor

An American general who lost a battle and lost his life is honored in North Carolina. A town, a prestigious college and a county are named for Gen. William Lee Davidson.

The British could obtain few provisions and got no news from outside. It was during this period that Charlotte earned her proud nickname "the Hornet's Nest."

Davidson College, Davidson County, Tenn., and Davidson County, N. C., are named in honor of this popular partisan leader. Near Cowan's Ford on Highway 73 an inviting park and a historical market remind passersby of Davidson's exploits.

Gen. William Lee Davidson died Feb. 1, 1781 at the Battle of Cowan's Ford, after the skirmish which delayed Cornwallis and gained precious time for Gen. Nathanael Greene to regroup and pursue the British general in his retreat.

The following January, Cornwallis decided to invade North Carolina again — this time going around Charlotte and crossing the Catawba at one of the numerous fords.

Dr. Chalmers Davidson of Davidson College, descendent and biographer of the Revolutionary general, in his book "Piedmont Partisan" also outlines 'the heroism and valor of the man who was responsible in a small way for the successive checks of Cornwallis which culminated in the final surrender at Yorktown.

William Lee Davidson was a backwoods general in North Carolina's War for Independence. Born in Lancaster County, Pa., in 1746, Davidson made the long trek to North Carolina with his family at the age of four. His father established the family on Davidson's Creek in southern Rowan (now Iredell) County a few miles from where Davidson College now stands.

Greene, sent by Washington to command the patriot army relied on Davidson to rouse the militia and delay Cornwallis until the Americans were ready for battle. While Greene retired northward to Guilford Courthouse, Davidson stationed men at each of the fords on the Catawba.

Demand for food has increased worldwide as people become more affluent and upgrade their diets. In the United States, the volume of food available per person is four percent higher than 10 years ago, state extension family living specialists, North Carolina State University.

Here he grew up, learned to ride and shoot, and also learned to read and write better than most of his contemporaries, since he was sent to a classical academy in Mecklenburg County to finish his education.

Cornwallis mistakenly thought the main body of the patriot army was downstream, so planned only a diversionary artillery barrage at Beattie's Ford, and decided to lead the bulk of his forces across Cowan's Ford at dawn.

More Food

At the outbreak of the Revolution Davidson immediately volunteered, was commissioned major of the 4th Continental Regiment, and marched away to join Washington's Army.

The river, swollen from winter rains and with a swift current claimed some of the British. The patriot picket at the water's edge on the other side sounded the alarm and Davidson rode at the head of his troops to reinforce them. But it was too late. The British had reached the bank and the young brigadier was shot from his horse.

He fought at Germantown, Pa., where he was promoted to lieutenant colonel for gallantry in action. With the North Carolina troops he suffered the ice and snow and privations at Valley Forge.

Although Cowan's Ford was an American defeat, the British were sufficiently delayed for Greene to prepare for battle at Guilford Courthouse. Davidson had not died in vain.

Although he held a commission in the Continental Army, he was transferred to second in command of the militia in the Salisbury district, which included the entire western section of the state.

After being wounded in the battle of Colson's Mill, Davidson spent several months at home recuperating. Later, Davidson was promoted to brigadier general in command of the militia, in place of the captured Gen. Griffith Rutherford.

During this time the British and Tories infested the piedmont of both Carolinas. Davidson's partisan bands were deployed for miles around, harassed the British, attacked the Tories and kept up the spirit of patriot resistance. However, Cornwallis was determined to take over Charlotte-Town and put an end to the local "rebellion."

For Sale—One three bedroom home in Mill Brook Estates will be completed by the first of February. Price $36,500

Cornwallis, with his greatly superior force, occupied Charlotte in September, 1781, and during his entire stay his men were under constant sniping attack from Davidson's militia.
