Rule Relaxed On N. C. Pig Movement

RALEIGH — On-farm inspection of North Carolina feeder and breeding swine within 90 days of sale will be dropped effective February 1, 1975. All other intra-state and interstate regulations will remain in effect.

According to N. C. Commissioner of Agriculture James A. Graham the swine movement requirement is being relaxed because there have been no cases of hog cholera in the state in two years. North Carolina was certified hog cholera-free January 16, 1974.

Graham praised the work of the vo-ag teachers, Agricultural Extension Service, NCDA and USDA inspectors and the farmers for their joint cooperation in enforcing swine movement laws. "It is due to their efforts that hog cholera and other swine disorders are under control in North Carolina."

Dr. T. F. Zweigart, state veterinarian of the N. C. Department of Agriculture, pointed out, however, that swine taken directly to a livestock market to be sold for other than immediate slaughter must have been in the possession of the owner for at least 30 days and that a permit from the state veterinarian accompany all hogs brought into North Carolina with the following exceptions; Swine entering the state for the immediate slaughter; feeder pigs moving directly from a farm where they have been located for at least 30 days or from a breed sponsored sale.

An official interstate health certificate must accompany all swine entering the state except for immediate slaughter whether or not a permit is required.
