CHUB. A Romance of West Virginia.

BY DAVID LOWRY.

CHAPTER XIX. A STARTLING CHANGE.

All who had heard of the missing bridegroom were anxious to see Dan Bash.

People came to the corners from all quarters to see the man who was held captive by the counterfeiters.

Chub Dawson, now for the first time known throughout the State as Miss Helie Dawson, as the newspaper correspondents described her.

"Well, yes—just what I was thinking myself."

"I've but made up my mind, as we've found Dan here, that the wedding may as well go on."

"I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"Well, I'm in dead earnest, Chub. I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"What else is there?"

"You'll have to send and have just the suit you want before the supper."

"And that will require time to give them notice, and to get the things here."

"I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"I'll be glad to see you, but I'm not likely to dance much with my feet for a few days."

"Sho! Humbug. You know it's humbug, Sheriff."

"I don't believe a word of it."

"But that isn't all."

Hank Dawson looked half angry.

"Humbag again Sheriff. Humbag. You don't believe it."

"Of course not."

"Dan Bash, who was looking calmly at the Sheriff all the while, now turned and looked up at Chub."

"Wouldn't it make a difference to you whether my name is Bash, Brown or Buff?"

"No, the least."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"What?"

"Hank Dawson peered in Ross' face."

"You a son of Dan Ross?"

"Is there anything wonderful in that or strange or startling?"

"Well, coming up here in the mountains—leaving all your fine folks behind you—starting out for a school?"

"I don't ask time. I know all about it, I think."

"I have nestled closer to his side."

"My name is Dan, too. People who know me call me Dan Ross junior."

"This beats all. It's more wonderful than a play—any play you've ever heard about," said Tom Walker.

"My reason for coming here under an assumed name was to avoid friends, who would perhaps follow me. They have a habit of hunting me up. They pop down on me in unexpected places. I had another reason, too—a powerful reason."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."

"I'll own up to it," said the Sheriff. "I'll own up to it."
