THE SIXTH DISTRICT MATTER.

Decision Will First Be Reported to State Committee.

The Raleigh News and Observer of last week says;

"Ex-Governor Charles B. Aycock has returned to the city from Wrightsville, where he was one of the committee engaged in investigating the tangle in the Sixth Congressional District Demoocratic nomination, the other members of the committee present being ex-Governor Jarvis, ex-Judge A. C. Avery, Hon. Theo. F. Kluttz, Sr., ex-Lieut. Governor R. A. Doughton was kept away by urgent professional business.

"Ex-Governor Aycock was asked it there was any statement concerning the investigation that he could give out at present, 'Nothing," was the reply. 'There will be no statement issued until one is given to the Democratic State Executive Committee at its next meeting.' The meeting is yet to be called, and the date will shortly be announced by State Chairman Eller."

"All doubt, all the haze about the success of the harmony committee appointed for the Sixth District Congressignal mix-up has been removed by the news that Hon, Hannibal L. Godwin will abide by whatever decision is made. That is a good position for that he would reach such a decision as soon as ruffled feathers had been smoothed and because he has always preached Democratic doctrine. Now the Republicans may as well abandon. hope of carrying the Sixth District. The next Congressman from this district, which two years ago rolled up a Democratic majority of 6,000, will be a Democrat. Just who that Demo crat will be depends entirely upon the report of the harmony committee, but there is gladness enough in the thought that he will be a Democrat. There will be no divided Democracy. There may be some score spots, but they will be secondary to Democracy Some man may fall wounded, politically, but he will manage to go, even though feebly, to the ballot box and deposit a ticket for Democracy-and ccess. It is hoped that the commit tee will make its report as soon as possible, so that the campaign may be opened on time in this district With only one candidate in the field we have no more doubt about Democratic success in the Sixth District than we have that the sun wil set this afternoon, Still, as Democrats, we want to be up and working for the good cause."

The Wilmington Star says: "We have always believed that Mr.

Godwin would do the right thing at the right time when called upon by the party arbiter to do his part toward a satisfatory settlement of the unfortunate Sixth District imbroglio. His position has been more or less incorrectly stated and repeated at times without proper authorization.
When official notice of the contest comes from the party organization, we find the Congressman paying heed, and in doing so he has done what will make him all the stronger in the district, whether he wins the nomination

POLITICAL CAMPAIGN IN BRITAIN

F. J. Hankin, in Atlanta Jou similar contests in the United States. Political issues are complicated when one party insists that one thing is paramount, and the other is equally certain that something else must be done to save the country. But the issues always are national, and never are complicated by the introduction are complicated by the introduction of extraneous local problems. Nation ally, Great oritain settles all its po lege of electors to select their chief executive; they elect a house of representatives by diret ballot; they choose the members of the state legislature, who in turn will send some man to the United states senate; and in each one of these three elections different problems are presented, and different men attempt to solve them in different wass. To this is added in different waqs. To this is added the confusion of county and city po't-tics, with the result that the voters in the United States do not wield so Because of the superior power of the British voter, the individual elector is given more consideration by British politicians than is the American citizen. For that reason what is a "campaign" in the United States is a "canvass" in England. The parlinpersonally as many voters as possible friends, especially women, must see the ones he cannot reach. The houseurban and rural politics.

Take for instance, the case of Mr. John Burns, the Labor member of the Asquith cabinet. In the January campaign he was expected not only to contribute his share of work as a member of the cabinet to the national Lib campaign, but he also had to make his house-to-house canvass of which often has returned him to no liament. It was in Battersea that young Burns started out in life as a factory worker, and he still lives among his own people and apparently is not spoiled by his comparatively large salary of $10,000 a year. It was physically impossible for him to see all of the voters of his constituency, but he went from house to house, an from street to street, and personally asked for the votes of the majority of electors in the division. In addition to this he made speeches every night during the last week of the cam-

The aignificance of all this is that lthough a member of the cabinet and one of the most prominent political leaders of the country, he had no political organization upon which he could depend for the active election eering in his home district. Party caucuses may select candidates in England, but there is no machinery for getting out the vote except the traditional canvass which must be under taken by each aspirant personally.

When the day of election arrives each voter is given the privilege of parliament-in exceptional cases there may be three or four-but he is not called upon to express his choice the same time for sheriff, court clerk, or coroner. There is no opportunity to swap off the head of the ticket for the benefit of the tail. This in itself obviates complications and corruption all too common in America.

The Englishman's sportsmanlike notions of fair play prevent attempts at ballot box stuffing and false counting. known to any extent in England and certainly not since the introduction of the ballot system of voting. Again taking the care of Mr. Burns, It is interesting to note that his stren-nous house-to-house canvass, and his arduous speaking campaign, fo!lowed by his triumphant e'ection, would have profited him nothing if any one of his supporters should have so much as purchased a glazs of beer with the intent to influence a voter in his behalf, whether Mr. Burns knew of the pur he ever had seen his enthusiastic par would have been the same, and Mr. Burns would have lost his seat.

After the recent election in which the Liberal party was returned to power by the narrowest of margins, only two members returned were un-seated on account of election irregularities. They were both Liberals, and their votes were sorely needed by the government. Both were unseated for acts of their agents, and the election court expressly exculpated both of them from any knowledge of, or narticipation in correct expressions. Thus one by one these grand old participation in, corrupt or filegal practice. But the penalty was visited upon

The purity of British political campaign is due in large part to the whole some fear of the ponalties of the cor rupt practices act. Candidate and their friends constantly warn their followers against any act which might be construed as a violation of the aw. Respectable candidates never wink at questionable procedure on the part of their respective supporters, as sometimes happens in America. T law is so stringent, and is enforced ever party or position, must respect

It is an odd contradition, but it is a fact that this straight laced system metimes actually works to the disadvantage of popular government. This is exemplified in the matter of furnishing free transportation to voters. Since motor cars have become on, the Conservative candidate always has a great number of machines at his disposal, because people who can afford motor cars usually are Tories. The Liberal candidate is prevented by law from hiring public conveyances, and therefore the Liberal voters must walk, while the Tories ride. As the Conservatives also have vast majorities of plural voters their side, and as the free motor car enables property owners to flit from one polling place to another, automobile question bids fair to be come a serious problem in political campaigning-especially for the Radi-needs reforming. The property quali fications for suffrage works a great njustice in that they give some many votes, while depriving other men of any vote. In this respect the system is far inferior to that of the United States. But, on account of the simpler and purer methods of campaigning, it is demonstrated in actual practice that the bad British system, safeguarded by enforced and enfor-cible laws, is better than the ideal American system, corrupted by ques-tionable methods and campaign managers who fear neither the law nor the Lord.
