ARNOLD SEARCH HAS COST TOTAL $75,000.

Fortune Spent in An Effort to Locate Missing New York Heiress—Left Home Last December and Hasn't Been Heard of Since.

New York, Aug., 12.—Since the disappearance of Charley Ross no case of a missing person has had so much attention as that of Dorothy Arnold. And in the history of no missing person was ever so great an effort made in all directions to discover what her fate has been; nor was money ever in any similar case so lavishly spent. The search that so far has been futile has cost $75,000 if it has cost a penny. It is still going on and money is still being lavishly expended, although as yet there is no definite prospect that the hunt will prove other than futile.

When Dorothy Arnold left home in Central Park West on December 12 last and left no word behind to explain her disappearance, and not clue to her whereabouts, although the youth and beauty of the girl had been illustrated by photographs of her published broadcast in the newspapers and sent out nearly as widely by the police, the mysterious case took the strongest kind of hold on the public imagination. In addition to her youth and beauty, the wealth of her family and the romances that had been spoken of as indicating the possible explanation of her disappearance, there was in the strange manner of her passing completely out of sight and knowledge to her family and friends a direct challenge to the police and the newspapers and, finally, to her family.

The finding of Dorothy Arnold has been the dream of every newspaper reporter since last December. To obtain a real clue to her whereabouts and to follow that clue to the presence of the girl herself would earn spurs and lasting favor and fame for any "cub" and would rank as the crowning achievement of even a star reporter.

The newspapers also employed private detectives in the hope that they might discover what the reporter had not been able to find, all in vain.

For some time the good faith of the Arnold family was doubted; the belief given that the missing girl had communicated with her parents or her parents' lawyers' telling them of her whereabouts, but binding them to secrecy because of dread of the publicity that would blaze upon her on her return. On the other hand members of the Arnold family have never ceased to keep up the appearance of searching for the missing daughter as eagerly and energetically as possible. They, too, hired private detectives at large expense from one of the most prominent agencies in the country. Mother and brothers, and now mother and father, aged, white-haired, growing sadly querulous when they speak of her fate; doubting if ever they are to see her alive, have made trips to Europe. They have gone or sent their representative to every spot on the map from which at any time there came any word that might possibly mean the locating of the daughter.
