WILSON IN LINE.

Governor Woodrow Wilson, of New Jersey, who has been "swinging around the circle" for some weeks,—part of which time was profitably spent in North Carolina, stopped over a couple of days on his return north to view conditions from the National Capital. The Jersey executive landed in Washington the day following Representative Underwood's bill revising the wool schedule of the tariff law had been approved by the democratic caucus, despite the vigorous protest of Mr. William Jennings Bryan, and an expression of his (Wilson's) views upon the matter in controversy was immediately sought. And there was no hesitancy about that expression, either. He commended in the strongest terms, the action of the Ways and Means Committee and approved, endorsement by the democratic caucus. Governor Wilson thinks the democrats in congress are fully equal to the task before them and believes in the caucus plan of settling their differences. A democratic caucus for the last fifteen years has signified very little, but now it is called upon to decide upon really constructive policies.

Touching the recent visit of Governor Wilson to Washington the following press dispatch is interesting:

After a day of political conferences, Gov. Woodrow Wilson of New Jersey left Washington tonight to resume his gubernatorial duties at Trenton, following a tour of the West and South.

His visitors were from all sections of the country, including Senators, Representatives and private citizens. Senators Martine of New Jersey and Gore of Oklahoma were among the first callers on the prospective presidential candidate.

All the conferences were open. To the members of the House particularly Governor Wilson expressed repeated congratulations. He said that the vigor with which the House had taken hold of its work had inspired the country with renewed confidence in the Democratic party. The action of the caucus of Democratic Representatives in voting for a reduction of the tariff on wool to 20 per cent ad valorem received his hearty commendation, despite the fact that William J. Bryan had warned the Democrats against any other course than taking all the duty off.

What the Governor had to say in regard to the Democratic caucus was summarized in these words:

"The resolution passed by the caucus is a very frank statement and justifies itself by showing that the Democratic party is trying to do the best that is possible and practicable in the circumstances. I mean that when we are revising a system, such as the tariff as a whole, we can make compensations of revenue along the whole line. But in revising it schedule by schedule, we cannot make these compensations, except in the individual schedules. That is one of the penalties of the step by step process. It does not seem to me that there is any abandonment of principle in the action taken. It looks to me as though the Democratic principles had been reasserted. Of course I am in favor of free wool materials, including free raw wool, but every Democratic platform has declared for gradual tariff reduction."

He reiterated his belief in the progressive movement as inaugurated in the West. The reforms adopted there, he declared, had proven very satisfactory. Along this line, he spoke of the progressive Republicans.

"I do not see any difference between the Democrats and what we call progressive Republicans," said he, "except possibly on the tariff."

He reiterated his approval of the Canadian reciprocity agreement.

"Will it help the Republicans or the Democrats in 1912?" he was asked.

"Which party it will help is entirely a matter of indifference. The party that thinks of itself and not of the country is going down to defeat," was the response.

IT IS "UP TO" THE SENATE.

The House democrats have done their part in keeping faith with the people by passing Mr. Taff's reciprocity measure and the farmers free list bill, and the country anticipates that the senate will, at least, pass the reciprocity agreement. The democratic party is committed to the principle involved and democratic senators will do the themselves credit and the country a service by supporting the House bill without amendment or revision. There is no necessity for spending weeks and months quibbling over petty differences, when a great principle is involved and a plain duty confronts them.

The country is anxious for the House bill to become a law and the senator, or representative, who opposes the measure on the pretext of hurtful results to the farmer, or any particular class of citizens, simply mistakes the sentiment of the people. Opponents who have been "solicitors" of the farmers interests may as well capitulate, for the "horney-handed sons of toil" are not afraid of being ruined. Below is a piece of news recently carried by the New York American touching the views entertained by Georgia farmers upon the reciprocity pact, which does not sustain the claim that the passage of the bill would be ruinous to the agricultural industry of the country. Here is the way Georgia farmers talk, through the New York paper, and farmers in other states of the South stand with them:

"The seventy-five thousand members of the Farmers' Union in Georgia, fairly and overwhelmingly representative of the two hundred thousand farmers of the State, sent today to the New York American, through their official and trusted representative their assurance that the agricultural mass of Georgia, which is the representative state of the South, heartily and enthusiastically indorsed the house bill on reciprocity, now waiting on the desk of the American Senate.

After all the subterfuge and false representations of the Lumber Trust and of the Paper Trust, the answer is coming thick and fast from the representatives of honest agriculture throughout the country, to prove that the good sense of the producers and tillers of the soil stands for the great reciprocity pact, indorsed by the Democratic party and by the Republican party and by the Republican president.

A week ago a Chicago newspaper polled the agricultural newspapers and officials of the central and further West, and 73 per cent of these papers and officials representing the farmers of the West declared for reciprocity."

Republican insurgents in the Senate and all democratic senators ought to get together at once and pass the House bill. It is the embodiment of a principle they have long been advocating. The people are not going to be deceived by any amendment offered, however plausible it may be.

We fail to distinguish between a revenue duty on lumber and a similar tariff tax on wool. And why some folks, who criticised senators Simmons and Overman—and six of the seven democratic representatives from North Carolina last year—for their votes on the lumber schedule of the Payne-Aldrich bill, are now commending the action of these same "free raw material" advocates for supporting the Underwood woolen schedule is a question that orthodox democrats appear unable to solve. There is neither justice or consistency in censuring senator Simmons and those who stood with him for a small duty on lumber, if the decision of the democratic caucus to retain wool on the dutiable list is right. And the country approves that.

Governor Woodrow Wilson says he believes in the initiative, referendum and recall, except as to the judiciary. This sounds better. The Governor goes on to say that changed conditions needed can be brought about without invoking the application of the new methods proposed if the people should determine to take governmental matters in their own hands. Thus it appears that the New Jersey executive, who is prominently mentioned in connection with the democratic presidential nomination, favors Mr. Bryan's new pet theory of the initiative, referendum and recall as a last resort in restoring former conditions under the rule of the people.

A man elected to represent the desires and interests of the people should surely be willing to subordinate personal views and preferences at all times to conform to the wishes of his constituents. No public officer should consider himself greater than those who created him. Let the will of the people prevail.

The North Carolina Good Roads Association met in annual convention at Winston-Salem on Tuesday of this week for a two-days session. Every town and county in the State should send interested representatives to this meeting.

IN MEMORY OF J. J. SHIPMAN

A Kind Friend, a Faithful Soldier, an Upright Citizen and a Christian Gentleman.

(Brevard News.)

Born in Henderson county, Oct. 25, 1833, and having been reared in a country home, he imbibed the elements necessary to make a naturally strong constitution, and was surrounded by such environments in his youth that there was instilled in his soul the ideals of an unselfish character. As a friend he was always true and faithful; always ready to forgive an injury done and never forgetting a kindness shown.

At his hospitable home and around his festal board men, women and children by the hundreds have had their thirst quenched and their hunger appeased. In that home the kinsman was made happy, the friend entertained and the stranger welcomed.

As a soldier of the civil war he was never known to shirk a duty nor disobey a command. Whether marching through snow or rain or facing the cannon in the most heroic battle, he was always at his post serving his country. And though a member of an army defeated by hunger and privation, yet he shines through it all a victorious soldier, and his devotion and interest shown in this cause entitles him to the honor for having kept alive the "old soldiers' organization" for the many years past.

And when he laid down his "sword of war" he picked up his "plowshare of peace" and for the remaining 46 years of his life he has served his country as a private and public citizen. As a private citizen he was loyal, law-abiding, always on the side of justice and morality.

He was a member of Company E, 25th Regiment, Capt. Jos. P. Deaver, and as a token of respect and love for the deceased the following war comrades and soldiers had charge of and accompanied his body in a procession to the grave: J. M. Hamlin, T. L. Gash, W. E. Deaver, L. W. Brooks, J. L. Allison, J. A. Miller, M. J. Orr, W. E. Brees, J. E. Duckworth, T. D. England, E. B. Clayton, W. K. Osborne, C. L. Osborne, W. H. Davis, D. P. Bishop, J. S. Health, Jos. M. Kern and J. W. Morris.

In 1876 he was elected a member of the county board of examiners for public school teachers. He has been tax assessor, also an acting justice of the peace and deputy clerk of the superior court of Transylvania county for a quarter of a century, all of which positions he has filled with honor to himself and with credit to his country.

As a Christian he accepted Christ as his Saviour and united with the Baptist church in early life. While he was honest in his convictions and earnest in his devotions to his church, still he was kind and generous to all Christian denominations. While he was firm in his decisions for righteousness, yet he was gentle and forgiving to fallen humanity.

He died April 28, 1911, after intense suffering of one week. His funeral was conducted in Brevard Baptist church in the presence of a large concourse of people, and his body buried in Brevard cemetery. Thus a long and useful life is ended. Peace and rest to his remains. He has gone never to return, but blessed be God we can go to him. To the family a loving humble husband, a kind and faithful father. The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."
