FASSIFERN NOTES.

The stage at Fassifern school was transformed Friday night into a real Irish kitchen, stone fireplace, latticed windows and primroses. The occasion was a presentation of W. B. Yeats' one act play, "The Land of Heart's Desire," exceedingly well acted by members of the English Department, Misses Pulliam, Brown, King, Pendleton, Mc Clammy and Lindsey. The superstitious peasants, the imaginative little bride, the fairy and the priest delineated their assumed characters with clearness and variety, giving a delightful evening's entertainment.

The Elsa Fischer String Quartet gave a delightful program of Chamber Music at Fassifern Tuesday night. These artists play with fine ensemble, well balanced tone and beautiful interpretation, and the solos for violin and cello were opportunities for individual success to which the musicians showed themselves fully equal. It is hoped this first class organization may make another visit to Hendersonville.

WASTE MATERIAL

Is my business. Rubber and bones I shall always want. It maketh me lie down in rags and burlaps, it feedeth my soul. It leadeth me in the paths of scrap iron, for it's name sake. Yea though I walk through piles of waste paper, I fear no evil, thy rods of brass and copper, they comfort me. If anointeth my head in tallow, my shop runneth over. I pray for a high market in the presence of my customers. Surely good prices will follow me all the days of my life and I shall dwell in the junk shop forever.

WHY WE SHOULD SUPPORT OUR HOME NEWSPAPER.

It is plain to see that without newspapers, we would not be able to know the news, until late, and a great deal we would never hear at all.

It advertises our home town; it boosts it more than any other one thing. It helps the trade of our town, through the merchants, farmers, money lenders, etc.

The newspaper is supported by the people (the subscribers and advertisers), and if we do not either subscribe for it or do our advertising through it, it must stop.

To have the newspaper stop means to slacken business of the town. We would no longer be advertising our town and would therefore have but few new settlers, if any, which would in time ruin the place.

The people would no longer know how other towns, villages, or cities are progressing and would no longer have any way for receiving new ideas. The educational advantages would not be as good, and those who do not attend any school would soon become ignorant and also careless.

The place instead of being lively, pleasant, and progressive, would be run down, unattractive and dry.

Why then would it not be better for us to do our part, which is very small, and have a progressive, attractive and wealthy looking place.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN AND BEVERLY BAYNE AS "ROMEO" AND "JULIET" IN THE ELABORATE METRO PICTORIZATION OF THE GREAT SHAKESPEARIAN PLAY

When Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, the greatest stellar combination in motion pictures, are seen in the big screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," an ambition of many years standing will then be realized by these two stars. It has always been their dream to appear together in this production, and Metro is leaving nothing undone to make it one of the year's screen sensations. Never before, in the history of the silent drama, has there been a more elaborate or artistic production. More than five hundred people were used in some of the biggest scenes. Castles of millionaires, near New York City, were used with their spacious grounds, and in staging many of the outdoor scenes an entire Italian city, of the fourteenth century type, was constructed for the street scenes in Verona. A notable supporting cast includes scores of actors and actresses who have been featured in many stage productions.
