Roosevelt Speaking

Syracuse, N. Y., September 17. Political leaders from all over the state gathered here today to hear an address by Col. Roosevelt at the state fair this afternoon.

Coming into a stronghold of the position, Col. Roosevelt boldly challenged the opponents of his political doctrines to come out in an open and fight if they dared. He prophesied if they did they would be beaten.

Speaking in high terms of President Taft as a public official, he expressed his approval of a number of the accomplishments of the Taft administration.

Col. Roosevelt referred to the arguments which had been aroused by his criticisms of two decisions of the supreme court. He had made an attack on the court, he had merely dissented from the opinion of the majority of that body. To attack a man, in whose opinion Col. Roosevelt concurred. The colonel maintained that every citizen has a right to express his opinions on public matters; and he referred to Abraham Lincoln's dissent from the Dred Scott decision, and W. H. Taft's strong defense of the right to revise the judiciary.

Gudger's Yarn is "Cheap Politics"

According to Congressman Webb— Complete Collapse of Gudger's Stupid Little Game

Gudger has lost out in his attempt to discredit Congressman Grant's good work in obtaining a building and site for Hendersonville and a site for Waynesville. Gudger claimed that nothing had been secured because the government had not set aside this year's money for next year's work. Congressman Webb, democrat, from the Ninth district, has come out openly against the Gudger convention and claims that that sort of thing is "cheap politics." Webb says that the buildings authorized in this year's bill are just like those authorized by all other bills, and that everything is all right. This testimony, coming from a democrat, is interesting.

Mr. Webb's statement is in part as follows:

The public buildings bill approved June 25 last, the day congress adjourned, is just like all other public buildings bill. It authorized appropriations for various objects and amounts specified in the bill.

When the public buildings bill was passed it became a law of the United States and pledged the government to the purchase of the sites and construction of the buildings mentioned in the act.

No public buildings bill ever sets aside or appropriates the money with which to buy sites and construct postoffices. This is entirely the province of the appropriation committee, which after the public buildings bill is passed, always sets aside or appropriates the money necessary as fast as the treasury department calls for it, and this department only calls for it as fast as it can use the money. The appropriation committee cannot set aside a dollar unless it is authorized by a law already passed, and this is the reason the public buildings bill must be passed before the appropriation committee can set aside or appropriate any money for a postoffice building. When the public buildings bill is passed, a congressman's work is practically done, for it is then left to the treasury department to call on the appropriation committee for the money to carry on the work as it is needed.

When money is appropriated or set aside by the appropriations committee for any particular object, it cannot be used for any other purpose, hence it would have been useless and poor business to set aside $25,000,000, the amount authorized in the public buildings bill, when one of this amount could possibly be used for six or eight months.

The supervising architect told me last May that he had 95 buildings on his hands in course of construction, and that he could not reach several buildings, authorized in the bill two years ago, for some months yet.

Every site and public building authorized in the last public buildings bill stands on the same basis as the Charlotte appropriation. If $1,000,000 had been set aside for Charlotte when the public buildings bill was passed, the work on the postoffice building here would not begin or be completed any sooner than it will under the terms of the act authorizing the present appropriation. Within ten days after the passage of the act the treasury department had advertised in every town where a site was authorized, for lots on which to erect a Federal building, though the bill did not carry the actual appropriations for this purpose; and so the treasury department is no doubt now preparing to enter into contracts for the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of the Charlotte postoffice building as 'directed' by this law. The money for the construction of this building will be forthcoming whenever the treasury department reaches the Charlotte proposition and calls on the appropriation committee for it. The appropriations committee will this fall set aside $50,000 for Charlotte if the department thinks this amount can be used during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911, and the fact that only $50,000 are set aside will not prevent the work on the Charlotte postoffice from going right on as fast as the treasury department can push it.

Mr. Webb further quotes the following statement from Assistant Secretary Hilles of the treasury department:

Answering your inquiry as to whether the fact that no appropriation was made under the authorization would delay the actual construction of the building, you are advised that all construction under the treasury department is taken up in the order in which the work is authorized and the titles to the sites vested in the government and the department is given authority to contract for the full amount of the authorization, whether any appropriation has been made or not. Therefore the necessity of having a large amount of funds tied up when they may not actually be used is avoided.
