THE LATE R. R. HAYNES OF CLIFFSIDE

The Cliffside Mills, at Cliffside, recognized as among the greatest gingham mills of America, is an enterprise, a monument to the ability and the energy of a native of the very hills upon which the great mill stands. Within the past week memory of the man, R. R. Haynes, has been awakened by the dedication of the R. R. Haynes Memorial Building at Cliffside. A great crowd gathered at Cliffside last Saturday night to pay tribute of respect to the great pioneer manufacturer of a region. He had not been dead very long, just a few years and is succeeded by his able son, who is recognized as capable of meeting the responsibilities of great enterprises, but his people were eager to make recognition of his achievements.—Spartanburg Herald.

If we continue in our present American course, the time may come when the more incompetent a man is the better qualified he will be for filling public office in some of our large cities.

The pigeontoe girl, who used to be the butt of all the jokes because her skirts never were long enough to hide her turned-in tootsies, is having many a quiet laugh at the way the short skirts have shown up her bow-legged sisters.

You can't accomplish big things until you have first learned to complete the little ones.

TALKS MADE AT MEMORIAL DEDICATION

tion he told me if his plans materialized this development meant the expenditure of two million dollars or more. When Cliffside was unattractive hillsides and covered with undergrowth and uninviting to everybody else, this man by clear vision saw what it was to become. Now, the man who dreams dreams and simply ends there in the dreaming is absolutely of less use than the man who does not dream at all; but this man had the faculty of making his dreams come true; by the tenacity of his purpose, by his faith, by his capability, by his dogged perseverance he brought his dreams to a full realization. Another thing I learned about him; I have known a few men who were business geniuses and who seemed to make quick decisions instinctively which were usually right. Now, I had a theory that Mr. Haynes was a man of this type; but I must confess to you, except in one instance so far as my experience is concerned, I had no proof of the correctness of this theory. On the other hand so far as my experience and observations of him were concerned, he did not reach quick decisions. He turned a question over and over again. He viewed it from every angle; he gave it consideration from every view point and when he reached a conclusion it was done after the most exhaustive consideration of the question from every side. So, it was not unnatural therefore, given a man with fine common sense and especially good business judgment and this profound consideration to the business problems which confronted him. I say it was not unnatural that he should rarely have made a mistake.

He was a loyal friend; he was a citizen of the highest type; he was a worthy father; he was a great constructive builder; he had in all that a profound interest in everything that went for the material and moral and spiritual uplift of his people and the best thing that can be said about him is he left the world better in which he had lived. This building, as has been said, no finer tribute to his memory could be given; that is evidence of the fact that notwithstanding he has gone, his spirit is still marching on in this community and these buildings are simply the dreams of his that have come true since he has been called away.

Mr. Clyde Erwin

Ladies and Gentlemen: We are met here tonight to pay our tribute to the memory of Raleigh Rutherford Haynes. It seems to me, as I have sat here, I could feel the spirit of his friendship still brooding over us and I am sure that from his position in the golden circle of the infinite, as he looks down on us tonight, there must be in his heart a great peace as this magnificent gift, this memorial building has been made to his people in his honor and I am sure that the name of Raleigh Rutherford Haynes has been carved in the hearts of his fellow men in the terms of the service he has rendered to them; and I feel that there is no greater way for a man to honor the name of his fellow men than in terms of service. I am sure that as the days go by and Cliffside grows into a bigger and more enterprising town that the name of Raleigh Rutherford Haynes will become very dear and I am sure that as his ideals are carried out his memory will become even dearer. It was not my privilege to know this great man and yet I wonder if I do not know him because I have seen his foot prints on the sands of time. I have seen his handiwork as it was wrought by him.

And, ladies and gentlemen, we have with us tonight as our principle speaker a man who has also written his name in letters of gold in terms of service in the hearts of his people, all over Rutherford county, all over the State of North Carolina he has served his people well and the State of North Carolina has cause to be justly proud of the man who has been called forth by the common people of North Carolina to help make the political history of this great state, a man who has rendered service to his State on every occasion and a man who has written his name already in the archives of history. Ladies and gentlemen, it is my privilege to introduce to you tonight a man for whom I believe the State of North Carolina holds even higher honors and which she shall gladly shower upon him some day in the future. It is my very great privilege and honor to introduce to you Honorable Clyde R. Hoey.

Studebaker

BIG-SIX SPEEDSTER

The new Studebaker Four-Passenger Speedster is mounted on the Big-Six chassis with the same dependable 60 horse-power motor that made enthusiasts of thousands of owners during the most critical buying period in history.

Every item of its complete equipment and finished detail suggests ultra style and riding comfort.

The front seat is tilted at the correct angle for comfortable riding. An upholstered armrest divides the tonneau into two individual seats which provide the comfort of an overstuffed armchair.

The touring trunk at the rear, with tray and suitcase compartments, is easy of access, because the two spare disc wheels are mounted on each front fender.

These disc wheels, complete with cord tires and tubes, are furnished without extra cost.

This latest Studebaker creation reflects Studebaker's seventy-year-old reputation for building fine vehicles.

In addition there is a handsome set of nickel-plated bumpers front and rear, a courtesy light on the driver's side, a built-in, thief-proof transmission lock which is operated by the same key that locks the ignition switch and tool compartment in the left front door. Eye Comfort Eye comfort in traveling is very essential to real enjoyment. We have illustrated it in the most obvious way here, showing you at a glance how such action intensifies the same element you face in your casual meandering.

Fitting your eyes to nature is nothing more nor less than scientifically finding which of your optical muscles are undeveloped and so equipping you that all unnatural strain is relieved. Then you have eye comfort.

Eye comfort is much to be desired at all times. None of us can do our best work unless we SEE correctly.
