HOW TO INOCULATE

Raleigh, Sept. 14 .- "It is well known that legumes are dependent on certain soil bacteria to help them gather nitrogen from the air," says E. C. Blair extension agronomist at State College, "and that it is usually necessary to supply these bacteria when growing a legume on a field for the first time. The last is especially true of vetch and crimson clover in culture, or, soil from a spot where porter, Mr. Yates Kendrick. the legume crop has recently grown may be used with excellent results.

"If soil is used," says Mr. Blair, 'scrape off about an inch of the top, and take what is needed from the next two or three inches. Apply about 300 pounds per acre with a grain drill, like fertilizer, having already mixed the seed with it. Where no grain drill is available sow the seed and som mixture by hand and disc in at once.

"An easier method and one that requires less soil is to moisten the seed with glue and water, molasses and water, or plain molasses, using just enough to coat every seed. Then mix one or two quarts of soil with each bushel, or roll the seed in soil. Enough soil for inoculation will stick to the seed."

It is best to sow inoculated seed n cloudy weather, or at least, when sun is low, states Mr. Blair, as lirect sunlight, or close contact with fertilizers will kill the bacteria. If ertilizer is used, work it into the Soil from a field of red, white, or alsike clover will inoculate from crimson clover. English peas (May peas) or wild vetch will furnish inoculation for a'll the cultivated vetches.
