THE UNITED STATES ARMY 100 PER CENT

Up-to-the-minute employment methods, such as modern business houses use, are to aid Uncle Sam in picking fighting men to fill the ranks of his regular army. For the same reason that led commercial firms to adopt psychology and other late wrinkles, army recruiting methods in vogue for years are being radically altered, says Sergeant James C. Crawford, in charge of the army recruiting station, at Rutherfordton.

Official war department rules, just received from Washington, now require sergeants to catalog the various qualifications of applicants for enlistment. No longer are men without previous service in the army to be sworn into service at once. Instead, their answers to test questions, with name and address attached, are filed. Except for a few vacancies to be filled by the second, third and fifth field corps areas, the army is now at full strength, but is not getting "choosier" merely because of that fact, Sergeant Crawford declared. Stricter standards are called for to meet increasing demands within the army for skilled mechanics and professional men, he explained.

Education, experience in particular trades, ability to absorb knowledge at the army schools, and ambition to take full advantage of the opportunity for personal improvement are the things insisted upon by the new questionnaire. Since recruiting direct through the local office was suspended, Sergeant Crawford has interviewed some 25 applicants at his office and entered their names for a later call if they are approved.

You have heard it—"they are all good automobiles"

THE impression that all cars sold at approximately the same price give approximately the same results, never was less true than today.

There are now two ways of building motor cars. One is to forget quality and build cars for trading purposes. The cost of production is cut to the bone, so that dealers may offer you more than the market value for your used car.

The Buick way is to build for quality's sake—to give owners a better new car full of value—with every modern feature.

Compare Buick design to that of other cars of the same or higher list price, and fix Buick superiority firmly in your mind, before you spend your money.
