CARE OF SCHOOL CHILDREN
 (By Conrad George, Jr., M. D., Ann Arbor, Mich. Member Gorgas Memorial Institute.)
 Children who are attending school should have regular hours for meals and sleep. Parents who allow their children to eat candy, cookies or anything else at anytime during the day without regard to their meals are unconsciously developing habits which are injurious to their children's stomachs and in course of time will impair their health.
 The stomach is a very active organ for several hours after a meal. The food has to be churned and then digested by the action of the digestive juices which are normally found in the stomach.
 Consequently, the stomach needs rest between meals and that is impossible when a child is allowed to eat at any time during the day. Furthermore the child has no appetite at meal time, becomes ill-tempered when requested to eat and cannot digest his food while he is in that condition mentally.
 The stomach is best able to digest the food at meal time because the digestive juices are then being secreted.
 A child should have plain, nourishing, easily digested and well-cooked foods served at the proper meal time. The feeding of milk at the schools in the middle of the forenoon is a practice which should be discontinued.
 The stomach is made to work at a time when it should be resting and the child has no appetite when the time comes for the noon meal. The child eats little or no breakfast with the expectation of getting the milk at school later on in the forenoon.
 School children frequently have no appetite for breakfast because they get up too late and try to eat in a hurry with the result that the food is not properly masticated nor digested. They should retire early at night and arise early in the morning. Their appetite will return for breakfast if there is plenty of time to eat it.

TO BUYERS OF COAL

Did you ever stop to think how much cheaper and easier it is to keep warm in the Winter than it is to keep cool in the Summer time? Ice, electric fans, vacations, trips to the mountains and seashore, paid for by the average family, make their fuel bills look small by comparison. Don't forget about "keeping warm" next winter.
