There's a Question

as to whether a man who insists on being called "Colonel" just because he parts his hair with military brushes, is goofy in the garret or torpid in the turnip. But we believe he'd make no mistake by obtaining groceries here because our prices feature distinct savings although presenting pure and quality values.

More Than Mere Impression

A student once asked a great master how to mix his colors or paints. To which the master replied: "Prime colors, a little oil and lots of brains, well mixed."

So with printing. A good printing job is more than type, paper, ink and a press. Craftsmanship is in selection of type faces suited to the job in hand; paper in tones, shades or colors; harmonious ink selections, careful press make-ready—and the result, printed matter which conveys character.

Let us demonstrate all we mean in your next printing job. Good printing costs no more than inferior jobs.
