TELEPHONE CO. USES TAXICABS TO RELAY CALLS

Important Telephone Messages Delivered in Jersey Town in Spite of Storm

Taxicabs took the place of telephones in the town of Pitman, N. J., recently when telephone service was disrupted by a heavy snow and sleet storm. About one-half of the town's 1,000 telephones were put out of commission, with the result that communication was tied up for some time.

In this emergency, however, the townspeople were not without telephone facilities, for in addition to its own cars and those of private individuals the local telephone company secured a fleet of taxicabs, by which messages from outside points were relayed to the subscribers whose service had been cut off.

When calls came in for people whose homes for the time being were without any means of communication these taxicabs were sent at the company's expense to bring the party desired to the telephone exchange or to pay stations in five Pitman stores, where there was no interruption with the service. Not all calls were completed in this way. The matter was left to the party calling a Pitman subscriber to decide whether the call was important. If it was the party desired was sent for by means of the taxicab.

Through the emergency service thus provided three doctors were "delivered" to homes where they were needed, while several persons were taken to the offices of physicians for treatment. The tie-up continued a day and a night for about 400 subscribers and a little bit longer for the remainder.

GIRL AT SWITCHBOARD SAVES SHOCK VICTIM

Miss Alice Keith, a telephone operator at Randolph, Mass., is credited with saving the life of Herman Shaw of that place. Stricken by a shock, Shaw laid for hours on the floor of his apartment which he occupied alone. Finally he gained sufficient strength to reach the telephone and ask the operator for aid. She traced the call and then summoned help. Shaw was found unconscious on the floor, the telephone beside him, and was removed to the hospital in Brockton.
