BUSINESS STANDARDS ARE BEING RAISED

Four business men of Danville recently spoke before the Kiwanis Club on business standards. One told of how cut-throat methods are giving way to cooperation. Another spoke of the inter-dependence of business men. Another referred to the professional ethics of physicians as applicable to business. Another discussed the luncheon clubs as helping in the observance of the golden rule in business.

The time has passed when there is any application of the old excuse that "all's fair in love and war" to business.

Business men work together through boards of commerce and through committees of citizens to bring about the advancement of the city in which they live. They work together in credit associations. Often those who are rivals in one business are associates in another.

Luncheon clubs have helped. Development of community spirit has helped. Business men of today value the confidence and friendship of their competitors. They do not try to "under-sell" each other by underhanded methods. When occasion demands they work together, cooperating for the common good. All of which is an indication of progress and development, not only in business but in the world in which business is so important a factor.—Danville Kentucky Messenger.

BUYS JONES GROCERY

Mr. D. F. Beachboard has purchased the stock, good will, etc., of the Jones Grocery Co., of this city, taking charge Tuesday. Mr. Beachboard is an experienced merchant, having made a success in the business at Caroleen, and besides, is a clever, popular gentleman. He will, doubtless, make a bigger success here in the larger field.

The Jones Grocery Co., was established by Mr. J. N. Jones April 20, 1917, and since that date has prospered exceedingly. "Uncle Newt" Jones, as those closer in friendship affectionately call him, has made a complete success in the grocery business in this city. A good business man, he has the added faculty of making and holding friends, which has been a wonderful asset in his business career. Mr. Jones will take a much needed rest before reentering business here or elsewhere.

Mr. Beachboard has retained the full force of competent clerks, composed of F. M. Flack, Robt. Blanton, J. E. Robinson and the delivery boy, Perry Shupper. Mr. Tom Jones, member of the old firm, will continue with Mr. Beachboard for a while at least. The Courier predicts that Mr. Beachboard will not only hold the large trade but that he will build a larger one.

SAVES SMALL CHILD FROM FALLING OVER HIGH CLIFF

Mr. Welford Alcock, of Louisville, Ky., who is here spending the summer with his father, C. E. Alcock, made his first visit to Chimney Rock last Sunday afternoon. While on the mountain side, near Pulpit Rock, a small boy slipped and fell and seemed on the point of being hurled into oblivion, when young Alcock shouted to him to grab a pipe line leading across the rock from which the boy was slipping. The lad heeded the warning, and held on until rescued by Mr. Alcock.

The parents of the lad were almost overcome from nervous shock at witnessing the narrow escape of their son. In the excitement, their names were not learned.

'GROW' CRYSTALS IN STUDY OF MAGNETICS

Remarkable Results of Research Regarding Material Used in Telephone Apparatus

When one thinks of growing any product for its usefulness, he thinks immediately of farm products, plants and animals. Growing iron crystals seems strange, yet the Bell Telephone Laboratories have been doing it for some time, in apparatus designed specially for that purpose. An iron wire is passed through the apparatus, and comes out a single crystal—a crystal a quarter inch in diameter and as much as two feet long.

Ordinary iron is made up of a great number of crystals which may be of either of two forms, one stable above 900° C and the other below that temperature. Crystal growth is accomplished by heating electrically a changing section of the wire, which is moved slowly through two contact cups containing mercury. As the wire moves, a section is constantly being heated and another is constantly cooling; at all times a very thin cross section in the cooling zone is just passing through 900° C. An original crystal on the cold side of this section, no matter how small, then grows by attaching to itself atoms as fast as they drop through 900° and thereby are released from the hot form of crystal in which they had been held. When the whole wire has been heated and cooled in this manner, atoms from the entire length have attached themselves to one particular crystal, which has grown correspondingly.

Studies in magnetization give the explanation of the whole procedure. If magnetic properties of a single crystal can be measured, information will be obtained of value, perhaps of great value, regarding iron and other magnetic materials so much used in telephone apparatus.

Just received, splendid new line of fall felt hats, in all the latest shapes, shades and colors. Mrs. E. E. McCurry.
