ANGLO-EUROPEAN TELEPHONE NOW WELL DEVELOPED

Fifty-seven Circuits Connect British Isles With Their Continental Neighbors

Telephone service between England and the Continent was inaugurated in April, 1921, when two circuits were completed between London and Paris. It was not until twelve years later, in 1923, that communication with Belgium began with two London-Brussels circuits.

When war broke out in 1914, twenty-three years after the Anglo-Continental service began, there were but thirteen circuits in operation and they carried just about one thousand calls a day. However, during the war, the telephone repeater came into existence in the United States, where it was perfected by engineers of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company for use in the first transatlantic line, uniting the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts, which was then being completed. The development of the telephone repeater at once attracted attention in Europe, where it was used on an extensive scale during the war; by the Germans to maintain communication between Berlin and Constantinople and with the German Headquarters in Macedonia, Roumania and Russia, and by the Allies for communication between their headquarters in France and Italy; and in Great Britain for the maintenance of communication at a critical time between London and the Military Headquarters in the north of England and Scotland.

Following the war, the first task was that of providing sufficient plant to meet demands for internal services, but by 1922, extensions of international services began, with the result that in September of that year an Anglo-Dutch service was opened, with two circuits between London, Amsterdam and Rotterdam. Since that time communication with the continent has increased to such an extent that there are now fifty-seven Anglo-Continental circuits in operation as compared with thirteen in August of 1914.

On the Anglo-French, Anglo-Belgian and the Anglo-Swiss circuits, the French language is employed for operating purposes, but on the other routes a considerable amount of English and German is used. The operators, for the most part, are required to speak more than one language.

HOLDS STEP-SAVING RECORD FOR NATION

Mount Vernon, N. Y., Has First Place in Development of Extension Telephones

Among cities of 50,000 population or more in which the Bell System operates, Mount Vernon, N. Y., has the distinction of possessing a larger development of residence extension telephones than any other city in the United States. Next to Mount Vernon is ranked East Orange, N. J. In these communities reside many New York business men who, having found extension telephones so useful in their offices, desire to have their homes similarly equipped.

The advantage of an extension telephone in the home is that it saves the housewife many weary steps. The use of such extension telephones is increasing rapidly, not only in New York and suburbs, but in other parts of the country. The city of Richmond, Va., has a high development of home extension telephones and likewise Washington, D. C.

Among other large cities of over 50,000 population where the Bell System reports a large proportion of extension telephones are: Portland (Me.), Hartford (Conn.), Albany (N. Y.), Syracuse (N. Y.), Yonkers (N. Y.), Atlantic City (N. J.), Harrisburg (Pa.), Pittsburgh (Pa.), Huntington (W. Va.), Oak Park (Ill.), Springfield (Ill.), Cedar Rapids (Ia.), Omaha (Neb.), Duluth (Minn.), Des Moines (Ia.), Dallas (Tex.), Little Rock (Ark.), Houston (Tex.), Oklahoma City (Okla.), St. Joseph (Mo.), Topeka (Kans.), Tulsa (Okla.), Wichita (Kans.), Denver (Col.), San Francisco (Cal.), and Oakland (Cal.).

TOUGH PROBLEM FOR TELEPHONE COMPANY

Rebuilds Three Exchanges Without Interfering With Handling of Million Calls a Day

What is declared to be the largest single transition project in telephone installation history was successfully completed recently in New York City. It involved the re-vamping of three existing central offices, with economizing in apparatus and space so as to provide for two additional offices to serve what is known as Manhattan's "white light" district.

All the time that this huge transition was being carried out, traffic went on as usual throughout day and night, approximately 1,000,000 calls daily being handled through these offices. The project took place in the West Thirty-sixth street building, which serves the heart of New York's shopping, hotel, transit, garment manufacturing, theatrical and night life district. Here the saying, "Broadway never sleeps," applies and the transition job of necessity was carried along with particular care against service interruption by night as well as by day.

It was necessary to literally rebuild these central offices. The task involved the removal of the entire incoming multiple switch-board and the replacement of same, re-cabling and in some instances transferring from one set of frames to another. This had to be done, of course, without any interference with service and it was a most difficult task.

When the task was completed there were two new offices in addition to the existing three to serve this important district of Manhattan.

The city of Athens in Greece has only 1,800 telephone subscribers.

In September the old poultry houses should be repaired or new ones built. Blue prints, showing how to build the North Carolina house, are available at State College.
