GIVES ADVICE ON CARE OF CALF

Importance of Proper Feeding Emphasized in Govern- ment Leaflet

Proper feeding and care in keeping the quarters clean are absolutely essential in the successful raising of the dairy calf, according to J. B. Shepherd, associate dairy husbandman of the United States Department of Agriculture, in Leaflet No. 20-L "Care of the Dairy Calf," just issued by the department.

Unclean pens, bedding, feed pails and feed cause many small disturbances of the calf's stomach and digestive system which hinder growth and development. Proper care exercised in keeping the pens clean and well supplied with dry bedding, in washing and scalding the pails after each feeding and in removing discarded feed from the feed boxes each day will aid materially in giving the calf a good start.

The calf should have whole milk, preferably from its mother, for the first two weeks. Skim milk and calf meal gruel may be used after this time.

A good meal devised by the bureau of dairy industry and known as the Beltsville calf meal consists of 50 parts, by weight, of finely ground corn, 15 parts linseed meal, 15 parts finely ground rolled oats, 10 parts dry skim milk, and one-half part salt.

To prepare it for feeding, mix to a smooth consistency with an equal weight of cold water. Then add 8 pounds of warm or boiling water for each pound of dry calf meal used. Stir thoroughly until well mixed and allow to stand for several hours. Warm to 100 degrees Fahrenheit before feeding. Mix only enough at one time for one or two feedings.

The best results will be obtained when this gruel is substituted gradually for the whole milk at about the time when the calf is four weeks old. The change should be very gradual, taking about four weeks.

Other factors essential to success in raising the dairy calf during the first six months of life are discussed in this leaflet, a copy of which may be procured by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

A FARM SAWMILL WILL SOMETIMES PAY

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 19.—Despite the waste in operating a sawmill on the farm, sometimes it is necessary for the woodlot owner to put in his own plant to get a market for his logs and to balance his labor.

"As yet," says R. W. Graeber, extension forester at State College, "We have few timber markets so developed that a farmer can cut his logs and deliver them to an established market such as for cotton or tobacco. There are some communities where markets exist for high class logs but on many farms there are top logs suitable for cross ties, rough framing or boards for farm buildings. Many farmers may find it more practical to operate their own saw mills as a means of controlling the cutting of timber from their woodlots."

Where such landowners have a supply of cheap power, such as water power or surplus energy at their cotton gins, a farm sawmill may pay. Mr. Graeber states that W. T. Brown of Moore county has a mill operated by water power and has been cutting an average of 50,000 board feet of timber each year for 25 years.

As a usual thing, however, there is too much waste at the average farm sawmill. The circular saw, commonly used at such mills, cuts one-fourth inch of sawdust each time it passes through the log, while the band saw of commercial plants cuts only one-eighth inch. Neither is the farm sawmill prepared to cut the highest class logs which requires careful milling to bring out the quality of the wood. Nearly all kinds of trees require extra equipment. This the average farmer cannot afford to put in, states Mr. Graeber.

The best solution of the whole problem is for every county in North Carolina to have some kind of wood working center where the grower may sell his product any day or every day in the year.

Old gentlemen just rescued from drowning: "Thank you, my good man, I'll remember you in my will."
Scotch hero: We'l how about cutting me off now with a shilling."

COUNTY HOME FARM SELF-SUPPORTING

One of the best farms in the county is the County Home Farm. Mr. C. S. Royster, superintendent of the home is a good farmer. He has more than fifty people to feed during the year and raises nearly enough supplies for them. Mr. Royster made the following yields for 1928: 700 bushel of corn, 364 bushels of sweet potatoes, 168 gallons of molasses, 165 gallons of kraut and 230 bushels of wheat. Mr. Royster has fifteen head of hogs to kill this winter and is getting 30 gallons of milk per day from nine cows.

Why The Editor Took A Winter Vacation

A reporter returned to the office after a convivial party with his brain slightly addled. He took some notes for a wedding and another for an auction sale, mixed them thoroughly, and then began to write:

"A very pretty wedding was solemnized at the T. J. Jones farm three miles west on highway 48 on Thursday last, when 2 yearling pure bred heifers were knocked down at a high price, together with other items too numerous to mention."
