PRUNE TREES LIGHTLY FOR BEST PEACHES

Raleigh, N. C., Nov. 19.—Peaches from trees lightly pruned have sold for 25 to 50 cents more per bushel than from trees heavily pruned. While the increases in yield per tree are not so heavy, light pruning does give better color, more uniform fruit, higher marketability and a reduced pruning cost.

"Due to the dense foliage caused by heavy pruning, the color of the peaches is poor and insect and disease injury is usually greater," says M. E. Gardner of the department of horticulture at State College. "The bearing area is also restricted. Light pruning together with careful thinning always pays best."

But, states Mr. Gardner, the grower must remember that there are three stages in pruning a peach tree. These are, the formative period when the tree is so pruned as to get its scaffold branches, the transition period when the tree is changing from heavy wood growth to fruit production and the fruiting period when light pruning will pay best. Mr. Gardner states that after the formative period, the modern tendency has been toward lighter pruning. This has resulted in decreased pruning costs, larger yields, better color and more first grade fruit per tree.

Light pruning, explains Mr. Gardner, consists of thinning the tree enough to admit sunlight and a free circulation of air with a minimum of heading back. Trees that have been lightly pruned for a period of years have a spreading habit and the limbs bear down under the weight of the fruit. This not only opens up the tree to admit sunlight but also puts most of the peaches within reach of ground pickers. It also gives a better distribution of fruit throughout the tree and seems to establish a better balance between root system and top.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE

Notice is hereby given that I have this day qualified as Administratrix of the estate of C. M. Young, deceased, late of Rutherford County, N. "Well, anyway you don't see so many intoxicated people on the streets since prohibition," said a Forest City man.

"Naw", replied John Poole, "the stuff kills 'em before they can get out."

MUMS FEED HEAVY: MUST BE DIVIDED

Raleigh, Nov. 19.—Chrysanthemums are hardy, are beautiful around the home in late fall and when established will live for many years.

"Yet they will not thrive indefinitely without transplanting," says Glenn O. Randall, floriculturist at the North Carolina State College. "When a planting of chrysanthemums is once made and becomes established it will live for a number of years but a close observer will note that after a year or so, the blossoms will not be so large and the stems will become shorter. This is because the flower is a very heavy feeder and soon exhausts the plant food in most soil types. Then too the plants become so massed together that there is not enough room for the roots to feed."

For this reason, the best practice is to propagate new plants from the original stock each year. This may be done easily, says Mr. Randall, by taking soft-wood cuttings from the old plants in early spring when the new growth has become three or four inches long. Remove these new shoots from the parent plants by cutting straight across the stem. Remove at least two thirds of the leaf area and place the cuttings in a sand-box immediately. In a few days, rootlets will appear. When these roots are about one-half inch in length, the young plants are ready for setting.

In rooting the new cuttings it is important to have the sand moist but not wet. After the new cuttings have set in the bed, cultivate them carefully and add plant food gradually.

By following this method, Mr. Randall finds the home gardener will have excellent, long-stemmed and well-flowered plants that are a delight about the home each fall.

ON EDGE Worried A Lot

"I took Cardui at intervals for three years, and have been in good health since last fall," says Mrs. Noble J. Hayes, of Waterloo, S. C. "My improvement after taking a course of this medicine was really remarkable."

"I am much stronger and can accomplish so much more work now. My weight increased twenty pounds, and my color is good."

"For a long time I had been feeling poorly. Some days I dragged around the house and had not enough energy to do my housework."

"I worried a lot about myself. I did not seem like myself, and my nerves were all on edge. I did not sleep well, and my appetite left me."

"I found Cardui to be an excellent tonic. After I had taken it a few weeks, I began to pick up and to gain in weight and strength."
