DEALS WITH PROBLEMS OF DAIRY FEEDING

Recommends Use of Various Home Grown Feeds

This season of the year when pastures and meadows are still too short to be profitably grazed, is often a trying one for the dairy farmer. Under such conditions a more general use of home grown feeds, especially ones which constitute a surplus or are unmarketable, would effect a considerable saving to farmers.

A bulletin entitled "Barley, Cull Beans and Potatoes as Feeds for Dairy Cattle," by C. F. Huffman and A. C. Boetzer from the dairy department of the Michigan State College reports the value of these feeds to Michigan farmers.

Potatoes can be introduced into the ration gradually this bulletin says, and it is not considered advisable to feed more than 30 pounds of them per cow per day, though larger amounts have been fed with no ill effects.

Chopping the potatoes is desirable in order to eliminate the danger of choking. Feeding after milking prevents any undesirable flavors from entering the milk. It is reported that the butter fat is produced from cows fed potatoes has a tendency to be salty. Feeding reasonable amounts of potatoes along with a good legume hay and a grain mixture containing a protein concentrate such as linseed meal seems to lessen this effect.

The same bulletin deals with the feeding of cull beans to dairy cattle. Cooking the beans renders them more palatable, but due to the greater cost and inconvenience ground beans are usually fed. When combined with a good roughage little or no other grain is necessary except for cows producing more than 30 pounds of milk per day. When ground beans are fed a good grain ration to accompany alfalfa hay would be 200 pounds ground corn or barley, 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds cull beans, 25 pounds linseed meal, 5 pounds salt.
