STYLES IN COWS HAVE CHANGED IN LATE YEARS

Today She Needs Better Care And Balanced Rations.

Old family albums are highly amusing, and old Nell laughs at the battered tintypes of her hardy ancestors. How cow styles have changed. It may have been the vogue to be proud of one's endurance to withstand cold rains, and inadequate shelter, but not for her modern Bossy sister. No bony rugged frames for her, or matted hair full of burrs,—and as for milk production, imagine producing only 60 pounds of butter fat yearly. Today's cow is very satisfied with her groomed appearance, her well-proportioned figure, and her record for butter fat is threefold greater than that of her old-fashioned great-grand-cousin Bessie. She may not be able to withstand climate rigors, but then she is a product of good breeding and feeding, and as such deserves more attention than her pioneer ancestors.

They probably would have "moo-mooed" at the idea of balanced rations, which are a necessity today, and she likes them too, especially the protein concentrate which makes her feel like "The top o' the morning," helps her to produce more milk, and acts as a regulator and conditioner. Such a concentrate as linseed meal is her favorite dessert. It has a cool lubricating effect on her digestive organs, and gives her a great appetite—the more she eats the more she wants,—and the more milk she produces. Her ancestors may have been stronger, but surely their coats were not as good-looking as hers, which is sleek and glossy from being fed well-balanced meals.

She knows her farmer-owner is a real friend, and wants her record to be a better one than those produced by her antique foremothers. While she is stabled for the winter she enjoys this ration; when clover hay is fed with corn silage 200 lbs. of ground corn, barley, or hominy should be fed; 100 pounds of wheat bran, 200 pounds of ground oats, and 100 pounds of linseed meal. It is usually recommended to feed one pound of the above grain mixture to every 3-4 pounds of milk per day. For high producing dairy cows it might be advisable to add a little more linseed meal to the grain mixture.
