

MAY USE THREE BALLOTS IN THE JUNE PRIMARY

Brummit's Ruling on Question Starts Speculation in Raleigh—Several Methods Possible.

Raleigh, Mar. 24.—There may be only one ballot in the Democratic primary June 7, or there may be three or four, depending entirely on how many ballots the State Board of Elections decides are necessary, according to the opinion of this question just given by Attorney General Dennis G. Brummitt to J. Crawford Biggs, chairman of the Board of Elections.

How many ballots will be used June 7 will not be decided until the meeting of the State Board of Elections to be held here March 29, according to Chairman Biggs.

But there is already plenty of speculation as to what action the board will take and the majority seems to agree that the board will follow out the new election law as it applies to general elections, and decide to have at least three separate ballots, instead of only one.

The new Australian ballot law provides that there must be seven different ballots in general elections. Attorney General Brummitt pointed out in his letter to Chairman Biggs, although with regard to primaries it merely specifies that the county boards of election must publish the ballots for the county contests and that the State board must provide the ballots for all the other contests, leaving the number to the discretion of the board.

Many Candidates

In the primary, the electors will vote on the candidates for the nomination for county offices, for State offices, for the United States Senate and for Congress and on the candidates for the nomination for judge and solicitor in the various judicial districts. The county candidates, according to the law, must be on separate ballots in those counties where there are county contests. There are 23 counties where the county officers are still nominated in county conventions. And in those counties where there is but one candidate for one nomination, no ballots are needed, as these candidates are automatically certified as the nominees of the party.

But the voters in all counties must participate in the primary in the selection of the nominees for the U. S. Senate, for Congress, for State offices and the judicial offices.

Will Have Three Ballots.

The general belief is that the Board of Elections will decide to have three ballots, one containing the names of the candidates for the U. S. Senate, one for Congress, and a third, containing the names of the candidates for State offices and judges and solicitors.

The Board of Elections, if it so chooses, may combine all of these into one ballot, according to the opinion by Attorney General Brummitt. But this would make the ballot very difficult to print, since it would have to be changed for almost every county, because of the differences in the Congressional and judicial districts. So there is little possibility of one ballot.

The ballots could be used, one containing the names of the candidates for the Senate and Congress, and the second the names of the States and judicial candidates. Or the candidates for State offices and the Senate could be combined, and the Congressional and judicial candidates put on another ballot.

But it is believed that both the candidates for Congress and for the State officers will object to being put on the same ballot with the candidates for the Senatorial nomination, because of the intense feeling in the present Senatorial contest between Senator F. M. Simmons and Josiah William Bailey. For there is fear among both groups that their majorities might be reduced should they be on the same ticket with the Senatorial aspirants.

Consequently it is believed that the State Board of Elections will follow the general lines laid down in the new election law as it applies to general elections, and provide a separate ballot for the Senatorial and Congressional contests, and put the candidates for State offices and for the judicial offices on a third ballot. This is believed more likely since the Democratic members of the Board of Elections are solidly anti-Simmons and pro-Bailey, and thus will not do anything likely to embarrass the situation.

Rough Farm Manures Used By Corn Crop

While any farmer can produce a good yield of corn by fertilizing it liberally with commercial plant food, the crop will also feed upon the rough manures available on most farms.

"How well corn responds to a liberal supply of organic matter in the soil is shown by a recent test which we made at the Mountain Branch Station near Asheville," says G. M. Garren, agronomist of the North Carolina Experiment Station. "In this test we planted the same varieties of corn on a poor upland soil and on a rich bottom land. In the same variety the yield would be over twice as much on the lowland soil as on the poor upland though both places received the same commercial fertilizer."

Therefore, says Mr. Garren, the man who is ambitious to produce the average of 50 bushels of corn an acre, which is the goal set for this year, should not become discouraged when he cannot afford large amounts of fertilizer for his corn crop. The corn plant can use the coarse manures to a greater extent perhaps than any other staple field crop. This crop occupies the land practically the entire growing season when the food liberating agencies are most active in the soil. The corn roots will take up this food as quickly as it is liberated and the breaking down of the coarse manures and the subsequent liberating of the plant food elements is a continuous process.

This, then, makes it possible to use all the old corn, cotton and tobacco stalks, tree leaves or other vegetable matter as manures in growing the crop. Stable manure is the best manure for corn growing and should be saved with scrupulous care says Mr. Garren. Plowing under legumes is the cheapest and best way to get nitrogen for the corn crop, but these other coarse manures will also help.
