Plant Velvet Beans To Improve The Soil

Velvet beans are especially adapted for use on poor, sandy soils as they make a rich, abundant growth and gather much nitrogen on soils that will hardly sprout other legumes.

"Demonstrations conducted in eastern counties have shown that where a good crop of velvet beans has been turned under, the corn yield has been increased from 19 to 39 bushels per acre," says E. C. Blair, extension agronomist at State college. "The yield of seed cotton has also been increased from 1148 to 1745 pounds per acre and that of peanuts from 40 to 60 bushels per acre."

Mr. Blair states that tobacco always responds well to the plant food furnished when this crop is turned under but that this is not always true when soybeans are turned under. He accounts for this by the fact that the proportion of potash to nitrogen is much higher in velvet beans than in other legumes.

Velvet beans are also very valuable for winter grazing of cattle. A good crop will furnish grazing for a herd of cattle from the first frost until February and there will be sufficient vegetation for turning under. For grazing, the beans should be planted in alternate rows with corn, making the rows three feet apart. On good land, they may be alternated with Biloxi soybeans instead of corn. This will make abundant forage which may be grazed from September until the following spring.

"Varieties best adapted for North Carolina are the Early Speckle, Osceola, and the Mississippi Black," says Mr. Blair, "and they should be planted not later than June first for best results."

A bushel of these seed will plant two acres of poor land and three acres of good land and can be obtained from your local seedsman at from $1.50 to $2.50 per bushel, he states.

Brim-full of the goodness that sunshine gives

THERE are favored areas of the earth's surface where sun and soil combine to make tobaccos marvelously good. Delicate Turkish leaves that ripen in the golden sunshine of the Orient . . . mellow leaves of Domestic from the sun-warmed slopes of our own Southland . . . the choicest of these great tobaccos mingle their mild, rich, natural goodness in the inimitable Camel blend. The keen, sweet zest and sparkle of pure sunshine is stored for you in Camel Cigarettes—irradiated by the sun itself. And up-to-date, scientific methods of manufacture preserve this flavor and bring it to you, mild and fresh, with none of its goodness lost.
