

A BEAUTIFUL LIFE.

Beautiful Words Fittingly Spoken of a Life That is Ended—Her Influence Lives.

LULA L. NORTHCOTT—Not an account of her death, for much has been said of that, but some recollections on her life.

If she had lived two months more, it would have been seventeen years since, to her parents, John A. and Mamie L. Northcott, was born this splendid type of young womanhood. She was the first born and she became to them, for a heavenly offering, the first fruits that their Master's Kingdom might be enriched for her presence. Thus, in the Spring time of years, resolutely and beautifully, and an "immortal answer to a mortal call" was given.

Her life here was of sunshine, of purity and of happiness and that she might possess these qualities fully matured, she is now a "Happy soul, that all the way, to Heaven hath a summer day." On earth, with Christ her strength, she fought the good fight and now she stands triumphant in glory.

Why venture this confidence? Because not only the writer but all those who knew her speak out, in bold acclaim, the merit and true worth of her life and her example. From a little child the writer knew her and was wont to look upon her and to judge her day by day. Thus it was the writer's privilege to see her grow into womanhood, developing, so strikingly, every outline of face and form, symmetrical and beautiful, and the while she developed a capacity for the highest mental and social attainment. With it all, did her great heart and soul flourish upon her faith and devotion in the God of Heaven. It was this fealty to her Maker that rounded out a beautiful life ere it was full blown in his service in Earth.

Perhaps no death has occurred here that struck as deeply so responsive chord of sympathy in the hearts of all the people. True, forsooth, because her life held out every promise and hope that it would blossom and bloom into a sphere of usefulness beyond reckoning; true, because to be deprived of her association and companionship is to be deprived of an influence that's a loss to a community. Then, too, our loss carries with it a corresponding sympathy that goes to the fire-side, around which she was accustomed to assemble, and make merry and inspire with confidence. But while her presence is no longer beside the family hearth, her influence is there. Let her loved ones feel and know that if sacrifice is the secret of beauty, culture and character, then, the absent one was truly fair, the embodiment of refinement, possessed of these ennobling qualities by which she was fashioned to be distinguished from others. Self-sacrifice in her devotion to humanity, and her love for her God was the law of her life. Like the Artist, who gave his mornings to the poor, his evenings to his canvas, she first sacrificed all to her Maker, her loved ones and friends and she looked last to her own welfare. As rust eats the edge of the sword, she knew that selfishness snatched the sweetness from the singer's voice and lest she might lend her influence to things steeped in personal pleasures she chose to wear her life away in kindly deeds for those about her and for the cause of Christ which she made bold to champion.

In appreciation of such a life, her friends contend for the privilege to attest their approval of her example. Her going is a personal loss to the writer who had so happy and intimate knowledge of her young life. She commends to the bereaved ones that—"I have heard that all the tears, All are saved throughout the years, Until some time by and by, When they are changed to jewels, aye, They will make the morning bright With their gleaming, happy light."
