LIGHTENING RODS A REAL PROTECTION

Lightning rods, with their accompanying air terminals and ground connections, when properly installed as a system on a building or other structure, give nearly complete protection from lightning.

Statistics from a State such as Iowa, where thunderstorms are frequent, show that more than 95 out of each 100 buildings sustaining fire losses from lightning were not rodded. It is estimated that about 50 per cent of the farm buildings in Iowa are rodded.

Lightning rods, or more properly lightning conductors, are nearly always made of copper or heavily galvanized iron or steel. The former generally in the form of a stranded cable, the latter of star cross section twisted into a long spiral. Copper is somewhat the better in durability. Both kinds of conductor when correctly installed give satisfactory protection.

Copper conductors should weigh not less than 3 ounces per foot; iron not less than 320 pounds per thousand feet, or a little over 5 ounces per foot, says the Weather Bureau of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Lightning conductors should be attached direct to the surface of a building without insulators. The air terminals to protect upward-pointing parts of the roof should be secured against overturning by the wind, and the ground connections extended downward to permanently moist soil, usually found at a depth of 8 or 10 feet below the surface. All joints should be permanently made and of low electrical resistance.

Birthday Dinner

J. A. Copeland and family, Rich Square, recently gave his brother, David F. Copeland, of Indiana, a birthday dinner at his old home where he was born in honor of his eightieth birthday. Out of eleven in this family, father and uncle Dave are the only two left.

Uncle Dave left his old home in 1865 and reached the State of Indiana just in time to see the dead body of Abraham Lincoln pass through. He has made this State his home with much success for 61 years. His visit with his friends and relatives has been a great pleasure to us all, especially the message he brings to us.

The dinner was prepared and when ready to serve uncle David found a cake with 80 candles on it and was asked to blow them out, so he took three blows and it left one burning. After dinner was served the family were all invited together in the old home for the purpose of thanking God for this occasion and the blessings He has bestowed on us. We feel thankful of our dear aged uncle, hoping he can spend another birthday with us.
