Four South American Animals of Great Utility.

The Llama in Particular, Well Called "Ship of the Desert," is Prized—Alpaca is Bred for its Splendid Fleece.

When first seeing a llama, an alpaca, a vicuna or a guanaco, in their native habitat your first comment would be: "Too big for a sheep, too small for a camel, yet looks like both," while you might add mentally, as did the yokel when he saw the giraffe at the circus: "There ain't no such animal." These extraordinary creatures, little known outside of the southern Andean region of South America, have their range from southern Ecuador through the elevated plateaus of Peru and Bolivia southward along the high Andes to the plains of Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego. All are of the very highest utility for men's needs for food and clothing.

The four are merely different breeds of the same race, varying only as they have been bred in domesticity for certain specialized purposes, or modified by their environment when left unhampered in their native wilds. Possessing a head like a sheep, a swaying, curved neck like a camel, without the camel's hump but drawn in at the withers like the camel and with the camel's "wobbly" look, apparently insecurely braced upon its tall, slender legs, with the camel's cushion-like splay feet, the llamas undoubtedly belong to the camel family. They have the camel's nature, for though more vigilant than the camel, they possess the same dull imperturbability, and their identical stubborn, morose disposition, and seem to consider man their hereditary foe, only to be obeyed by compulsion and with spiteful splittings and groans.

The llama family in prehistoric times had a much wider range than at present, their fossil remains being found from the republic of Colombia northward to Central America and even as far north as central Colorado. The llama and alpaca are domesticated, the guanaco and vicuna are still in the wild state, and this is one of the instances where domesticated animals range co-existent with their wild congeners. Of the four kinds the guanaco is the most numerous, and is found in bands of 5 to 500, and while confined to the high table lands elsewhere, in Patagonia their range is over the plains and lower lands as well.

Both the guanaco and vicuna are easily tamed and readily take to captivity, and from the wild guanaco and vicuna have sprung the domesticated llama and alpaca. The alpaca is kept upon the wild uplands near the eternal snows and is only driven in to be shorn of its beautiful fleece of black or brown wool, which is so long that it often falls over its sides and back like a curling cascade reaching to the ground.

When Pizarro and his fellow conquistadores conquered the aboriginal Peruvians they found the llama the only domesticated beast of burden. Under Spanish domination more than 300,000 llamas were used to carry silver from the mines to the seacoast, but the coming of the horse, the burro, and more than all else, the railway is gradually running it out, as it is timid and slow, and can travel with its 100-pound pack only 12 to 15 miles a day; yet it retains a certain advantage, as it is never fed on the trail, but forages its own living.

Baboons and an Airplane.

Writing of the passing of an Avro biplane over Uttenhage en route to Port Elizabeth, a South African newspaper has the following to say: "Mr. Norman Chase relates a peculiar experience he had in connection with the plane. He was bathing at Kamaoka, when he noticed a number of baboons which were in the vicinity showing unmistakable signs of fear. They crowded together and whimpered, giving every indication that something unusual had disturbed them. Mr. Chase's dog, a well-trained Alsatian, and known to be plucky and fearless, also became uneasy, and appeared to be in dread of something. On looking round for the cause of all the trouble, Mr. Chase observed the airplane flying overhead at a comparatively low altitude. The sound of the engine and the huge birdlike appearance of the plane no doubt upset the equilibrium of the baboons."—Scientific American.

Danger in Improper Cooking.

In the Italian experiments indicating that much of our food is uncooked, or at least not cooked enough to destroy bacteria, a large joint of corned beef that had been boiled three and a half hours showed a temperature in the center of less than 140 degrees Fahrenheit. This is hazardous to most disease germs, including tubercle bacilli, with which beef is believed to be especially liable to be infected. A meat pie eaten by a number of people caused two deaths, and, while this appeared to be well baked outside, the middle gave evidence that it had not been heated above 100 degrees Fahrenheit.

A Politician.

A woman being shown was quite a politician and once while running for a much coveted office, was charged with getting the women's votes. He suddenly became courteous to all women of voting age and not only was successful in getting their votes but married one.—Chicago Tribune.

Lemon.

Most persons may not know that the scent and flavor of lemon peel reside in minute cells, close to the surface of the fruit, and that by slicing it thin they will cut through these innumerable cells and thus obtain double the quantity of the essential oil that could be procured by anyone careless of this fact. The cells being cut through, it follows that a great part of the oil remains on the white of the lemon. This is easily attracted by rubbing a lump of sugar over it.

How Do You Get That Way?

A young woman writes to inquire how to tell when she is in love and when it's the weather. She says she cannot always differentiate between the depression that comes from the gloom and the rain, and the tickling of the heart. The two moods are identical, as she is able to "analyse them."—Berkshire Eagle.

Infancy of Rice Cultivation.

Rice was cultivated centuries ago in India and later in Egypt. About the year 1400 its cultivation spread to Southern Europe. In 1647 Sir William Berkeley planted one-half a bushel of seed in Virginia.
