Beauty is Sacrificed by Paris Women for Style.

Many Are Willing to Disfigure Features in Order to Follow Prevailing Mode.

Not long ago, states a Paris correspondent in Vogue, in one of the crowded theaters of the boulevard, a fair-haired woman, sitting several seats in front of me, bowed. "But why should she speak to me," I wondered, for it was no one that I knew. Presently, however, wrapped in superb robes, she left her chair, and when she was quite close to me, I realized with amazement that it was the glorious Martha, once famous for her dazzling beauty and animation.

How appalling that any woman should be willing to so disfigure herself in order to follow the mode! From a perfect oval, her face had become so elongated that her chin projected, and there were perceptible hollows beneath her cheek bones. Since it is the fashion to be thin, there are certain women who, although they possess beauty so rare that it should be considered a sacred charge, will become absorbed by this stupid craze to reduce their weight. This does not apply to one woman alone, for there are eight or ten in every group who change from day to day, and are certainly far from improved.

Often the apparent plumpness of a woman is, in reality, the result of unwise selection of frocks. Too many among those who would be considered irresistible fail to understand that they cannot gown themselves in the same style as their exceptionally slender friends. It is merely a matter of retaining the proper and becoming line, whether one be slim or inclined to rounding curves.

More than ever any woman affecting ornaments for the face, it is even possible to wear diamonds and best jewels of a sort of frozen permanence made entirely of imitation diamonds. Even women who possess most beautiful jewels do not hesitate to appear wearing one of these ornaments, with a result that is truly surprising in its effectiveness.

It may be because the search for them through the old parts of Paris is found to be amusing. One has to make one's way through a crowded street full of delivery wagons, enter a workman's house, clamber up a staircase that is falling to pieces, where finally one discovers the counter behind which a smiling shopkeeper displays the marvels of her boxes. These creations made of imitation stones are copied exactly after the models of the great jewelers, and everyone from the most fastidious duchess to the most modest bourgeoisie who longs to imitate her, has climbed the terrible dark staircase to capture the head dress which will make her as fascinating as Cleopatra or Catherine of Russia.

FRILLED VEST AND COLLAR

Charming vest and collar of frilled embroidered cream net. It will suit much to any one-piece dress or tailored suit.

LATEST FASHIONS IN BRIEF

Braiding is More Popular; Angora Used on Sport Hats; Butterfly Bustle Drapery Worn.

Braiding is becoming more and more popular for all sorts of embroidery. One of the prettiest fashions imaginable is the white ostrich mounted on amber.

A very chic design for a suit shows a mandarin embroidered vest worn with a plaited skirt.

The soft frock with sheer chiffon wash is a favorite and the fancy is a charming one.

It is predicted that metallic trimming is to be much in evidence on the new fall blouses.

Angoras will be much used on fall models of sport hats of the better type, while crepe satin in all colors is again returning to favor.

The soft flowing style of the blouse, placed on a draped tunic with the loose ends hanging down and touching the left shoulder, is today the most striking small hat trimming.

The butterfly bustle drapery is pretty for evening wear, but with a persistency which is astonishing, designers recently have declared for the straight frock, which is always graceful, comfortable and usually easy to wear.

Style. No chains of adjectives to linked harshness long drawn out; no digressions thrown in as parentheses; but crystalline definiteness and clearness, fine and varied rhythm, and all that delicate decision, all those reflexes of word and cadence, which belong to the highest order of prose.—George Elliot.
