Around Orchard

FERTILIZERS USED IN FRUIT ORCHARD

Hits and miss methods of using fertilizers on orchards are generally a waste of money. So states A. F. Farley, pomologist of the New Jersey State College of Agriculture, New Brunswick.

Furthermore, the type, general condition and previous treatment of the soil all have a direct bearing on orchard fertilization.

General fertilizer recommendations for orchards are not very satisfactory, for they do not always meet the requirements of the individual orchard. However, the following recommendations are made for the average apple orchard:

"Acid phosphate is the most economical source of phosphoric acid for orchards and should be used at the rate of 400 to 600 pounds per acre. On light ground, muriate of potash at the rate of 100 to 150 pounds per acre may be beneficial.

Generally speaking, fertilizer applications should be made early in the season. This applies particularly to nitrogenous fertilizers used in orchards of low vigor, but is not as important in orchards where the trees are vigorous or when acid phosphate and potash are used.

Curculio Is Injurious to Plum Crop Each Year

The plum crop suffers injury more or less each year from the plum curculio, a small insect which injures the fruit by puncturing the skin in egg laying and also by feeding on the flesh. The injuries thus made result in the fruit becoming dwarfed, knotted and very much misshapen.

Mr. C. E. Patch, entomologist in charge of the Dominion Entomological Laboratory at Hemmingford, Que., recommends as a control measure to keep the orchard surroundings clear of all rubbish and thicket growth.

Horticulture Facts

Well pruned trees are easier to spray and make harvesting a less strenuous task.

Farm orchards can be made profitable by proper selection of trees and good management.

Young apple trees could be better protected by a clean culture in early season followed by a cover crop, or a little mulch of some kind in the fall.

Sprayed apples can be eaten in the dark. Extension circular 61 tells how.

The proper time for budding peach trees is either during the latter part of June and early July, or during the last part of August and first of September.

The peach leaf-curl is held in check easily by spraying with lime-sulphur, 1 to 15, early in the spring while the trees are still dormant.
